SHE SAW IT FIRST.

A Philadelphia Teamster Who Proved Himself a Chesterfield in Manners.

He was only a teamster, but his soul was filled with a chivalry which we are led to believe typified the knights of old. And in a coat of mail he might have passed muster, for he was a big, brawny chap, with no little physical beauty of the rough sort, says the Philadelphia Record. As he guided his heavy dray down Market street hill the other morning one of the horses slipped in the icy street, and in his effort to recover his equilibrium lost a shoe. Putting the brake down hard, the driver jumped from his seat to recover the shoe.

But, quick as he was another claimant was ahead of him. She was a fashionably attired young girl of about 16, with a roguish, laughing face. Just as the teamster leaned over to pick up the horseshoe a dainty-gloved little hand reached in ahead of his big red one and clutched the coveted prize.

"I got it first," she cried, laughing gleefully. "Let me keep it, do, please. It's such good luck if you see it come off yourself."

The big teamster removed his fur cap and bowed with Chesterfieldian grace. "Certainly, miss," he replied, gallantly. "If I can assist you to good luck I shall be most happy."

Then, quite unabashed, he climbed up to his seat, and the girl walked up the hill with the horseshoe.

IS CLOSED DOWN.

The Saw Mill Closed Down for the Season.

The Red Lake river froze up Monday night, and Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock, the Thief River Falls Lumber company's saw mill closed down for the season. The booms in this city are well filled with logs, and the mill will start up next spring as soon as the ice goes out. Most of the men employed in the mill during the summer will go to the woods, but a few will remain in town and work at repairing the mill for the next season.

Shooting Deer at Duluth.

J. J. Frey, a real estate man of Duluth, accompanied Dr. Confer on a deer hunt. You can kill deer most anywhere on the hills back of that city, and an occasional moose is said to trot through the town to see how the place is building up in the closed season. These hunters thought they'd hitch up the doctor's sorrel horse and drive out a few miles where the deer were thick. They tied the nag and separated going through the woods, until Frey heard a suspicious noise. He saw what he supposed was deer, a few rods off, and blazed away, killing the doctor's horse. They walked home.—Crookston Times.

HE IS WITH US.

Frank M. Eddy Will Do What He Can for Us.

Congressman Frank M. Eddy was in the city Tuesday conferring with the members of the Commercial club and business men regarding the opening up of that part of the Red Lake Indian reservation in the counties of Red Lake and Marshall. A meeting was held in the parlor of the Hotel Ogahmah, which was quite well attended, and, while no positive arrangements were made, the plans proposed by the congressman were considered as the best. Mr. Eddy stated that it would be almost impossible to open the land to free homestead settlement, and, if it were opened in that way, the people of Thief River Falls would regret it, as the rush for the land would be so great that there would be bloodshed and riots. The Indians knew the value of this land, and they would not consent to cede it to the government unless they received a fair compensation. The plan he thought best was to sell it to the highest bidders in squares of 160 acres, only one man allowed to purchase one-quarter, and this to be followed by an actual residence of five years, the purchase price being not less than $1.25 per acre. This would insure the Indians securing a reasonable price for the land; it would prevent speculators from getting large tracts, and it would be much easier to secure the passage of a bill of this nature at an early date than one that would open it to free settlement.

FRANK M. EDDY.
Congressman From the Seventh District.

Most of the people present heartily indorsed Mr. Eddy's views, and it was decided to send a committee of three to Alexandria to confer with Senator Knute Nelson regarding the matter.

At the close of the meeting a settler on the reservation asked Mr. Eddy if it were true that the so-called free homes bill was ineffective. This made the plain, blunt representative of the Seventh district a trifle indignant. "I will reimburse out of my own pocket," he said, "any settler who is required to pay a dollar outside of the customary land office fees to secure his land, and there will be no additional legislation required. I do not care so much about the roorbacks that have been circulated over the district, but when the opposition deliberately lies about a thing that is of public record, I object. I have always tried to honestly represent the people of this district, and will continue to do my duty."

QUEER WAYS OF BRIDEGROOMS

A bridegroom once came to the minister to engage him to perform the wedding ceremony, says Lippincott's Magazine, and after all the arrangements had been made the bridegroom-elect said, frankly:

"I tell you right now that I can't pay all in one lump the three dollars I am planning to give you for the job. I have had a cut in my wages and I won't have the three dollars to spare all at one time. I'll give you a quarter after the wedding, and then I'll come around to your house ev'ry Saturday night and pay you a quarter until I am square with you. I don't like this here gittin' married on the installment plan, but it is the best I can do."

Said a southern minister:

"One of the queerest fees I ever received was from a young negro bridegroom for whom I performed the wedding ceremony at my own home. At the close of the ceremony and just as the bridal party of five or six were about to depart the bridegroom said: 'Yo' will find de fee for yo' kindness out in a co'nah ob de po'ch, sah.' I followed the party out on the porch, and when they had gone on their way I looked in a corner of the porch, where I found a pair of fine fowls tied together by the legs. They set up a lusty squawk as I picked them up. The bridegroom had said as he went down the steps that they were 'ob his own raisin',' but I never felt quite sure of that."

GERMANS IN THIS COUNTRY.

Among the States Wisconsin Leads in the Number—Percentages of the Cities.

Milwaukee, famous for its beer, may now claim distinction as being the "German City" of the United States. There are more Germans in Milwaukee in proportion to its population than in any other city. The percentage of population is 66, and Hoboken is a close second, with 57 per cent. New York has only 38 per cent., and Chicago 37 per cent. Boston is at the bottom of the list, with a German population of only seven per cent. of the total. Detroit, Buffalo, Cleveland, Newark, Cincinnati and Jersey City have larger percentages of Germans in their populations than either New York or Chicago, says the New York Herald.

Among the states Wisconsin leads in proportion of residents born in Germany. It is estimated that 263,000 native born Germans are now located there, or 17 per cent. of the total population. New York, however, has the largest number of native born Germans—553,000, but this is only nine per cent of the population. Illinois has 300,000, or ten per cent. Minnesota, with 129,000, is equal to Illinois in percentage. Iowa has 144,300 Germans, but a percentage of only eight, while Massachusetts stands about at the bottom of the list, with 31,000 Germans, and a percentage of one. The United States is credited altogether with 2,993,000 German-born residents.

In his speeches throughout the state Gov. Lind never fails to hand himself large bouquets, and always poses as the implacable enemy of the railroad companies. He never omits telling about what awful things he is doing to the railroads, and how he is saving to the state thousands and thousands of acres of land. The basis for these claims is the wrongful deeding to the Little Falls & Dakota Railroad company of 13,000 acres of land it had not earned, and his own labors to have the grant annulled; also of his refusal to sign land grants "for thousands of acres."

Both these claims are ridiculously false, and the governor knows it; he is simply making them with deliberate intent to deceive. The true history of these "events" and of his connection with the railroad companies is as follows:

When R. C. Dunn entered upon the duties of state auditor in January, 1895, one of the first matters to receive his attention was the condition of the different railroad land grants. Among the number was that of the Little Falls & Dakota Railroad company, a branch of the Northern Pacific railway, extending from Little Falls to Morris, Minn. He found that the terms of the grant had not been complied with by the railroad company.

The granting act provided that the company was to receive ten sections of state swamp land for each mile of railroad completed, provided that the line was built from Little Falls to the western boundary of the state. It was further provided that the company should not receive or be entitled to receive any lands until a division of thirty miles of line was built, the grant only attaching to a completed division of thirty miles.

State Auditor Dunn found that the grantee had not completed its line to the western boundary of the state as provided in the act, but had made the village of Morris, in Stevens county, its western terminus. He found also that only two thirty-mile divisions had been completed and that the last division was not completed, only twenty-seven and a half miles having been built. He further found that the preceding state auditor, Adolf Bierman, A DEMOCRAT, had deeded to the company over 13,000 acres of land on account of the incompleted division.

State Auditor Dunn took the position that the Little Falls & Dakota Railroad company had received 13,000 acres of swamp land more than it was legally entitled to, and he promptly refused to deed any more lands to the company. Further than this, he placed the facts before the next succeeding legislature, in 1897, and strongly urged that provision be made to enable the state to recover the lands wrongfully conveyed to the company. This the legislature did and suits were commenced during the administration of Attorney General Childs with that end in view. As the lands are situated in different counties the litigation has necessarily been protracted. But there is not the slightest doubt that the state will recover these lands—THANKS TO THE VIGILANCE OF STATE AUDITOR DUNN.

In view of these facts it is simply laughable to hear Gov. Lind now claiming in his political speeches that HE was the mover in this matter, and that, thanks to HIS EXERTIONS, the state will recover these lands. He had no more to do with this matter than the babe unborn. The first steps were taken by Auditor Dunn before John Lind was thought of for governor, and the case was in the courts before Lind was elected; and as a matter of fact, the governor has no more to do with the adjustment of swamp land grants made by the state to aid railroad construction, than has his chief clerk or his dairy and food commissioner. The statutes place the control of such matters ENTIRELY in the hands of the state auditor, and during the incumbency of Mr. Dunn the rights of the commonwealth in all such affairs have been carefully guarded.

During Gov. Lind's incumbency in office he has signed a number of land grants to railroads, but he had to have something to make a grand stand play on, and he refused to sign one, AND ONLY ONE. This was for 120 ACRES of swamp land to the Southern Minnesota Railway company. This company had earned its grant and is certainly entitled to the 120 acres, and can collect it; this opinion was submitted to the governor by the attorney general. But the campaign was coming on and Lind found it necessary to create a little political capital; he had to have a new issue for the ones of 1898 were badly frayed—from a Democratic point of view—hence his refusal to sign the deed.

And this is how he is "saving the state thousands of acres of valuable land." This is how "he will forever stand a protector between the railroads and the people." To persons who are conversant with the facts his self-laudation is not only ridiculous—it is disgusting.

Gov. Lind, in his speech at Waterville, Oct. 12, gave a gratuitous and uncalled-for insult to the country press, which the newspaper boys will not forget in a hurry. After a tirade of abuse, he went on to say that "the country newspaper amounted to nothing after all, but if you did want them, why buy them." Then followed a roast of the country editor delivered in Lind's own style of invective.

In his will even the miser gives all he can.

PLEDGES THAT WERE BROKEN.

Promises Made by Gov. Lind in 1898 Make Interesting Reading Now.

In his campaign two years ago, John Lind pledged himself to an economical administration of the state's affairs. Under him, every department has been run at much greater expense, and some of them with almost criminal extravagance.

He pledged himself to "reform" the various branches of service. He has, in fact, built up a Tammany Hall in Minnesota almost as corrupt as the notorious New York machine.

He told the farmers they "were being robbed" by the grain inspection bureau. The present grain inspection is a by-word among shippers and farmers who know of its incompetence.

He charged mismanagement of the prison binder twine factory and promised, if elected, to give the farmers cheaper twine. The past year, through the grossest incompetence, it was necessary to sell the prison twine at a much higher price than ever before, and at a higher price than outside twine sold at.

He recommended placing the fat fee offices upon a salary basis—and then went into a lobby with the Democrats to defeat a bill introduced for the purpose.

He recommended increasing the gross earnings tax on railroads—and the bill was defeated by the vote and efforts of his personal representative in the senate, Senator Schaller.

He recommended the passage of the Miller bill, to end the dilatory tactics of railroads in preventing reductions or freight rates—AND THEN VETOED THE BILL!

He denounced Public Examiner Kenyon, and replaced him with a man named Pope, who was the subject of the first public scandal ever attached to a state office in Minnesota.

He said he was "just as good a Republican as he ever was, except on the silver question." A year later he announced publicly that "he was anti-Republican, ANTI-REPUBLICAN IN EVERYTHING!"

Lind's Arguments This Year.

This year Mr. Lind maintains a discreet silence about his civil service reform, the expense of various institutions conducted under him, his public examiner, his promise of cheaper twine, and other matters which he advocated two years ago. In his speeches he is telling the people that:

"If he had the power he would tear down the American flag in the Philippines; that it is a mere rag there."

That he is the enemy of the railroads—and his personal organ is the St. Paul Globe, owned by Jim Hill, the railway magnate.

That all the good legislation accomplished by the last legislature was through his efforts. All the measures he claims credit for were previously recommended by REPUBLICAN officials and were made laws by a REPUBLICAN legislature.

That there is no complaint about his grain inspection bureau—and yet the official records show AN AVERAGE OF SIXTY COMPLAINTS A WEEK.

F. C. BUTTS, Northern Minn. Agent, Fergus Falls, Minn

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

The Chicago Tribune

Is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.
Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but is independent in the best sense of the word.
It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.
Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.
For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.
THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.
Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.
It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.
While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.
Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.
It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

A VERY GOOD DOG.

W. J. Kelly Has One There Is Money In.

W. J. Kelly undoubtedly has one of the most intelligent dogs in Thief River Falls, and a little incident happened last Friday morning which added $10 to the dog's value. The dog has been taught by his master to run and pick up articles thrown at a distance and return them to his owner. Last Friday morning Mr. Kelly undertook to entertain a company of friends by having his dog do some tricks. In the absence of any article to throw for the dog to pick up, he took two five-dollar bills from his pocket, rolled them up in a wad and threw them to the dog. The bills must have been covered with grease, or else the dog mistook them for a piece of meat, for he swallowed them down at one gulp, and that is the last that has been seen of them.

Reds Want Land.

Interviewed by the Crookston Journal, George A. Morison, Indian agent at Red Lake, states that he does not believe it to be to the best interest of the Indian to have that portion of the reservation lying within the counties of Red Lake and Marshall opened to settlement.

"The best agricultural lands on the reservation are contained in this strip," said Mr. Morison, "and the Indians will want them for their own use before many years. I do not believe they will consent to have the diminished reservation thrown open, at least not unless the government will purchase the entire stirp and take the chances of selling it. The existing rule is that the Indians receive nothing for the lands remaining untaken, but I do not think these lands will be open under that rule."

While we have a great deal of respect for Mr. Morison's opinion, we are obliged to differ with him. The land at present is not used by the Indians in any way, and it is doubtful if it ever would be. It is too close to civilization, and the temptations laid in the path of the Indians around here are too great for them to overcome. Mr. Eddy proposes to have the Indians receive a fair price for the lands, and this is all they should expect.

The St. Hilaire Mill.

The large mill of the St. Hilaire Lumber company closed down Monday night, after a successful run throughout the entire open season. They have again, for the third time, played in the best of luck, as they have run the entire season without an accident or breakdown, which, no doubt, is largely due to the able management of such practical men as Superintendent Miller and his assistant, Wm. Burse, as well as a few others that we might name. The output of lumber for this season is in the neighborhood of forty million feet. Next year's cut promises to be a heavy one, as they have on hand about twenty million feet of logs, and the mill will be put in operation as soon as the weather will permit.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

Daly Has Enough.

Senator Daly was at Fergus Falls attending the fall term of court. He has recovered from the effects of the congressional campaign, but says it was the hardest piece of work he has ever undertaken. The strain of constant travel and two speeches a day is something terrific, and he says he has about come to the conclusion that a man who will make four such campaigns as Congressman Eddy has made is entitled to congressional honors.

GONE BROKE.

S. Bisazza Declares Himself to Be a Bankrupt.

S. Bisazza, proprietor of the Peoples Store, Crookston, last week filed a petition in the U. S. court, declaring himself to be a bankrupt. Mr. Bisazza was at one time in business in Thief River Falls, burning out in the Great Northern hotel fire in the winter of 1898, when he removed to Crookston.

His liabilities are placed at $25,000, and his assets, while scheduled at about $30,000, will probably not bring more than $8,000. The creditors number about 100, and are mostly wholesale houses.

Mr. Bisazza said that his confidential man, Wilson, had recently departed unannounced, and had left him considerably "in the hole." Wilson's conduct, according to Mr. Bisazza, was one of the causes which led up to the failure. The following letter was received by Mr. Bisazza from Wilson the first of the week, and explains itself:

Euclid, Nov. 12, 1900.

Mr. Bisazza:

Dear Sir:—I beg to inform you that I have did my best towards collecting, but, owing to hard times and poor crops, can do nothing. I also wish to ask you to get another man to fill my place. I do not know when I can pay you the money I owe you. I am going east. I am tired of this state. I am going east. Kind regards to all my fellow clerks. Yours,

WILLIE J. WILSON.

Warren Mill Burnt.

The costliest fire Warren has ever suffered occurred last Wednesday morning, when the Warren Manufacturing company's flour mill was entirely consumed by fire. At one time it was feared that a general conflagration would result, as the mill was located in a thickly settled part of the city, but the entire absence of wind was most fortunate. The loss will amount to $25,000, and the property was insured for $15,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. The mill was being operated during the day previous, and it is supposed to have caught from the furnace.

THURSDAY, NOV. 22, 1900.

Statistics tell us that the timber crop of the United States exceeds in value, annually, the entire product of cereals and the output of gold and silver mines in the United States. And yet, comparatively little is done to provide for a future supply of trees. No country was more blessed in its forests than the United States. Minnesota alone was originally two-thirds covered with wood. The visible supply is being rapidly cut, as well as wasted, and this great resource is diminishing. This is the public side of tree planting. Not until a general interest is excited among the boys and girls of our land in this institution will tree planting be the institution that is intended.—Crookston Times.

By way of comparison, someone has prepared an exhibit which shows that there are 250,000 saloons in the United States, that the value of liquor consumed is $1,200,000,000, and tobacco $800,000,000, making a total of two billions. The cost of meat, sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, woolen and cotton goods, boots and shoes consumed is $1,905,006,000. The per capita paid for liquor is $17, that for education is $2.50 and for religion $1.40. The amount paid for liquor is claimed to be four times as great as paid for life insurance, five times that paid for paupers, courts, prisons and police officers, more than the gross railroad earnings, greater than the debts of all the states or the national debt, greater than the deposits of the savings banks, would pay the national debt in eight and a half months, and would require a tax of 48 per cent on the assessed value of the country, greater than raised for all taxable government purposes.—Preston Times.

The census shows that there are 1,400,000 more farmers in the United States than there were in 1890. The number of manufacturing establishments reported by the present census is 635,000, as against 350,000 in 1890, but this number will have to be cut down about 85,000, because of the excessive zeal of the enumerators. Perhaps they were actuated also by a desire to increase their compensation. An enumerator receives 25 cents for every manufacturing establishment reported, and, since the returns came in, a good deal of "padding" has been discovered. For example, when two or more kinds of articles were manufactured by the same person or company under the same roof, some of the thrifty enumerators reported two factories and made out two schedules, thus doubling the number of establishments and their own pay. Blacksmith shops and repair shops on big farms and plantations were reported as manufactories, while eagerness to increase their pay and make a favorable report caused many enumerators to exaggerate.—Chicago Record.

In the recent congressional elections in South Carolina, there were less than 29,000 votes cast, and yet these votes elected seven congressmen. In North Dakota there were about 50,000 votes cast, and these votes elected one congressman. This is an illustration of the difference in this particular which exists all along the line between the northern and southern states. The representation of the states in congress and in the electoral college is based on population. In the northern states the people vote. In the south this privilege is withheld from a large portion of the people. This is not due to the lack of desire on the part of those who are disfranchised, but to a deliberate intent on the part of the dominant whites to prevent the negroes from voting. It would seem that the ends of justice would be better served if the apportionment were based on the vote cast, rather than on the population, but the constitution provides for the latter method. It does provide, however, that where any portion of the population is disfranchised, the representation of the state in which it is done shall be diminished in proportion to the number disfranchised. It is likely that, in drawing up the new apportionment bill, this clause of the constitution will be considered at some length.—Grand Forks Herald.

THE POPULATION

Of Counties in the Northern Part of Minnesota.

The population of Minnesota by counties was announced the first of the week. The following is the population of a few of the counties in this vicinity:

Red Lake	12,195	7,006
Roseau	6,994	1,001
Kittson	7,889	4,886
Marshall	15,698	9,130
Polk	35,429	23,185
Norman	15,045	10,618

MARKETS.

The condition of the roads leading into the city has been such this fall that Thief River Falls has seen very few farmers, and, consequently, business has been very poor. Eggs, butter, wood and hay have been very scarce, and all are at present demanding good prices. The snow the fore part of the week will improve conditions considerable, and will help to bring the farmers in closer contact with the business men. It is estimated that about 10 per cent of the wheat raised in this section has already been marketed, and, unless the conditions are extremely favorable, one-half of the crop will will not be marketed by Jan. 1st. A large per cent of the farmers have not yet threshed, and some of them will not try to do anything until spring.

Oats have been demanding a better price in Thief River Falls than in any other portion of the state, and this is probably accounted for by the fact that lumber companies have been obliged to ship in oats to send to the woods.

Hay, which has always been so plentiful in this section of the country, is very scarce this year, and few farmers have any to sell. It is being shipped here from abroad and will demand a good price all winter. A number of farmers have been obliged to sell their stock, owing to the fact that they cannot secure hay to winter them.

No. 1 Northern	63c
Flax	$1.50
Mutton	3c
Eggs	18c
Butter	18 to 20c
Hay, per ton	$6.00
Potatoes, per bu	40c

Last week's increase of 669,000 bushels in the American visible supply of wheat was not helpful in sustaineng the market, nor were the world's exports of 8,147,507 bushels, which exceeded those of the preceding week by over a million bushels. Shipments from this country were a million bushels lighter than in the previous year, and Argentina sent out 1,160,000 less than in 1899, but the movement from Russian and Danubian ports was enormous, quite disposing of any rumors that the yield in northern Europe would be restricted.

GIRLS IN WHEAT FIELDS.

Young Women of Kansas Earned Big Sums Harvesting the Bountiful Crops.

Hundreds of Kansas girls now have a pocketbook full of new, crisp money as a result of three weeks' work in the harvest fields this summer. Many of them have earned enough to buy their winter clothes. There is no way to tell the exact number of girls who were employed in the wheat fields this year, but from the numerous notices of town girls going out to do harvest work, as contained in the local newspapers of the state, it is believed that no less than 500 women were thus employed. The work is easy, and the pay is two dollars per day. They can sit on a binder or mower, shock wheat or rake hay, just as the old farmers may wish. The day's work is from sun to sun, and the men treat them with great respect and courtesy. But the girls will not allow the men to relieve them of their share of the work.

Eighteen young women from McPherson this year went into the fields and earned enough money plowing and harvesting to take them on a trip to the Atlantic coast, at which place they are now. Other girls have earned enough to send them to school this winter, and many more have spent their money for fine clothes and jewelry. The daughters of the farmers do not work in the fields so much as do the town girls, who go out during the summer to make a little vacation money. The harvesting is now over, but many girls may be seen running plows. In some parts of the state they help thresh the wheat, but women at this work are not seen in the Wichita section.

MILES' NEW UNIFORM.

Adds a Star and Adopts a Cap of the Russian Military Type—May Make Other Changes.

Lieut. Gen. Miles has made a few changes in his uniform since he attained his new rank. He is privileged to devise his own uniform and that of the members of his staff.

Since becoming lieutenant general he has added a star to his decorations, says the Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, and has adopted a cap of the Russian military type. He has under consideration changes in the uniform of arms officers. These changes will not be radical, and will be dictated by economy and greater adaptability for service, with special consideration of the requirements of duty on foreign stations.

One of the changes purposed is the abandonment of the full dress helmet, a cumbersome, heavy affair, which does not add to the personal appearance of the wearer and increases the discomfort of military apparel. It has been suggested that a cap be worn on all occasions and that a blouse be adopted which will serve for full dress and undress uniform. The distinction for full dress will be attained by additional decorations.

The quartermasters resent any interference with the uniform regulations, and the fact that Gen. Miles is considering the subject has already led to some ill-feeling between the quartermaster general's office and the headquarters of the army.

It has taken all Mrs. Cunningham has earned in doing washing during the past four years to pay attorneys to defend her rights.

A gawky country boy dropped into a North Dakota town recently and after wandering up and down the street for an hour or so, stopped in front of a store building to gaze at a window hanger advertisement of some political candidate. In a little while he was joined by one of the town loafers, and before long another, then two or three more. The farmer said not a word, but continued to look. After half an hour had passed one of the more curious of the loafers could stand it no longer and asked the farmer boy what he was looking at. The country youth turned his head and answered: "I was jest tryin' to see how long a fellow could tend to his own business in this town without some durn fool wantin' to know what he was doin'."

THE TWIN CITIES

Will Probably Help Thief River Falls.

The following, taken from the columns of the Minneapolis Tribune, indicates that the people of Twin cities will aid us in our endeavor to have the Red Lake reservation opened up:

Minneapolis business men are interested in the development of the northern part of the state, as the establishment of business centers throughout the hitherto unsettled districts mean an increase of their trade.

Never before have such active measures been taken to settle the northwest, and the last two years has witnessed a remarkable advancement. Every fall there are many prospective settlers from the southern part of the state and Iowa, who seek northern locations. Most of these pass through Minneapolis and are directed to purchasable lands by representatives of local real estate dealers.

The most recent move there is the result of the interest taken at Thief River Falls in the opening of the diminished Red Lake Indian reservation. Congressman Eddy will introduce a bill at the coming session of congress, it is thought, providing for the opening of that portion of the reservation, as the demand for homes is great, and the land in question is not being used by the Indians.

Mr. Eddy has just returned from a visit there, where he thoroughly familiarized himself with the situation. There is room for about 1,200 settlers on the strip which congress will be asked to throw open. It is made up of choice agricultural lands.

Literary Club.

A meeting was held at the residence of James Meehan by a number of young people of this city last Saturday evening for the purpose of forming a young people's literary club. The matter was discussed, and an organization was perfected by electing the following officers:

President......James A. Wilson.
Vice President..Miss Richardson.
Secretary......Miss Farnsworth.
Treasurer..........M. K. Wall.

A committee was appointed to endeavor to secure a suitable building for the club. A meeting will be held Saturday evening at the residence of C. L. Dobner. All members are requested to be present.

Sutton Indicted.

J. J. Sutton, of Argyle, who has for years been engaged in stock shipping in Marshall county, was last week indicted by the grand jury in session at Warren, charged with manslaughter in the second degree. Sutton is charged with causing the death of W. W. Swift, of Minneapolis, which occurred in Argyle two weeks ago, and which was supposed to be due to alcoholism.

Palaces on Wheels.

The Burlington's new Minneapolis and St. Paul-Chicago and St. Louis train consists of a buffet library car, a combination sleeping car, a standard sleeping car, a compartment sleeping car, a dining car, a reclining chair car and a day coach (high back seats.)

The most costly, beautiful, luxurious cars on earth. Steam heated; electric lighted. Wide vestibuled. No extra fares.

RED LAKE INDIANS

The Number Is Said to Be on the Increase.

Concerning the population of the Red Lake Indians, Agent Geo. A. Morrison says:

"The impression has gained that the Red Lake Indians of northern Minnesota are decreasing in numbers. The contrary is true, however. Ten years ago the band numbered less than 1,200, and the June census showed an enrollment of 1,349. To these have been added a few who are the offspring of Indian mothers who have married whites and removed to other portions of the state, but who have rights equal with those who remain. Then, too, the birth rate is increasing, and, at the present time, there are 1,380 members of the Red Lake band.

"At the village across the lake there are about 300, and it is for these that the new government school has been erected. These 'Cross Lakers have been represented as being averse to accepting the conditions of civilization, but this is not true. They have adopted the white man's garb, and there is now but one 'blanket' Indian among them, an old man 80 years of age. They are really more industrious than those living about the agency, and have never been in a starving condition. They raise considerable corn and add to their clearings and fields each year."

MARRIED.

Frank Halda and Miss Julia Michalek were married last Saturday.

Ole Chustoferson and Miss Elvine Jacobson were married Sunday afternoon at the residence of the bride's parents, on the East Side.

BORN.

CITY "SUMMER HOME"

Society Woman of Boston Throws Open Her House to Workers.

While She Is at the Seaside She Provides a Delightful Home for Her Less Fortunate Sisters.

By the kindness of Mrs. Mary Kehew, prominent in philanthropic work, six young women of Boston are having a luxurious home during the hot summer months. She has thrown open to them her beautiful home at No. 317 Beacon street, while she spends her leisure at Swampscott. One idea of Mrs. Kehew in doing this is to induce other persons to open their city homes, usually shut for the summer, to working girls compelled to live in the city.

The six girls to take advantage of this unusual act of kindness are Miss Ellen Huntington, an assistant in the housekeeping school on South Botolph street, now in the Harvard summer school; Miss Terrill, who employs her winters and summers in the same way; Mrs. Emma MacFarland, a stenographer in a downtown office; Miss Mary Lee, a young woman who earns her livelihood with a needle, and Miss Crawley, an employe in the state house. They have the full run of the house. Then they pay four dollars a week, which pays for all meals, including the lunches which they take to their work and for a servant to care for the house and get the meals.

Miss Huntington, who is interested in scientific housekeeping, takes general supervision, goes marketing, and handles the money. Thus far she has kept her bills easily in hand. This little family has just completed its fifth week. They are to remain there until September 3, and perhaps longer. The plan will be developed further and more systematically another year, it is hoped, so that the Back Bay may become a summer home for working girls.

PERSISTENT CAMERA FIEND.

Takes Snap Shots at Mrs. Oelrichs and Mrs. Vanderbilt Against Protests.

The neighborhood in front of the Newport (R. I.) Casino was the scene of unusual excitement the other morning during the driving hour. A camera fiend, failing to get a picture of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs at a respectable distance, approached to within two feet of her and took a snapshot against her expressed wishes. She sought the protection of Officer McCormick, and he and Mrs. Oelrichs returned to the man and gave him a severe talking to. He, also, much to her disgust, made a snap-shot at Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., who drew up to the sidewalk in her automobile.

An hour later Hermann Oelrichs and W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., appeared upon the scene, and, much to their surprise, found this man still at the Casino entrance shooting his camera most audaciously at pretty society women. Vanderbilt dared the man to take his picture, and Oelrichs scolded him severely. The man's manner, though, was not apologetic at all, and Oelrichs, growing more exasperated every minute, kicked the camera out of his hands and smashed it into fragments. The man cried at the loss of his $35 camera and left the scene vowing he would sue Oelrichs.

WEDS A GIRL IN CUBA.

Toledo Physician Wins the Daughter of an Officer in the Spanish Army.

The marriage of a well-known young physician of Toledo, O., to the daughter of a wealthy lieutenant colonel of the Spanish army in Cuba has just come to light. Dr. Daniel Moor is a descendant of old revolutionary stock, a graduate of the Toledo high school and of the Toledo medical college. He met in Cuba and married Senorita Elvorita Meave. This was after the war in Cuba. Dr. Moor spent his war time in Chickamauga as assistant surgeon of the Sixth Ohio volunteer infantry. It was not until a year later that he went to Cuba and met his bride.

Elvorita Meave, now Mrs. Moor, is Cuban born, but of Spanish parentage. Her father has made his home in Cuba for 34 years and he is a wealthy land owner. He originally came from the province of Viscaya, Spain.

BUYS A GLASS DIAMOND.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Duped by a Bright Young Man with a Hard Luck Story.

Owners of a wealth of jewels are not always judges of real gems, and that is why Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt is sad to-day. She was at their private dock at Newport with her husband when a bright young man with a sad story of trials in South Africa and smuggled diamonds showed them three gems. Mrs. Vanderbilt selected one she liked, and her husband paid $150 for it. Tiffany says it is worth seven dollars.

Mr. Vanderbilt regards the matter in the light of a huge joke.

After selling Mr. Vanderbilt the same fellow called on Mrs. Ogden Mills and endeavored to involve her in a like transaction. Mrs. Mills' secretary, a bright young girl, interviewed the stranger, and, becoming suspicious, ordered him from the house.

Evening Things Up.

The Chinese invented gunpowder and the western powers are using it on them, and western men invented the machine guns now being turned on the armies of the allies by the heathen. The Chicago Record thinks it looks like an even break.

COUNTRY'S MANUFACTURES.

Census Enumerators Will Show That They Exceed by 100,000 the Estimates Made.

It is estimated by the department of manufactures of the census bureau that there would be about 500,000 schedules returned from the enumerators doing the work for that department. It was shown, however, when the figures reached the 405,033 mark that the estimate was much too low, and as four-fifths of the first estimate is now in the total number of manufactures in the country reach at least 600,500. Schedules are being received at the rate of about 19,000 a day and are in progress of preparation for the final reports.

In speaking of the progress being made by the enumerators in this line, Director Merriam said he feared the strikes in Chicago might retard the work somewhat, but not materially. While he hopes to have a far more accurate census of 1900 than was ever made of this country before, he still thinks the citizens have not taken the numerous important questions as to age, nativity, parentage, environment, and so on, as seriously as was necessary for a future study of the conditions and betterment of the people of the country. He appreciates the fact that the Americans' sense of humor has led to this, and on graver consideration the matter would have received more serious and truthful treatment.

The work of paying off the enumerators goes steadily on, and the other day the number paid in full had reached 13,500, representing $500,000.

GERMAN MANUAL TRAINING.

Progress Made in This Branch of Education—Country Has 861 Schools of the Kind.

"There exist at present in Germany, distributed in 60 places, 861 schools and institutes wherein manual training is carried on in 1,514 workshops," says Consul Guenther at Frankfort. "Of this number 835 schools and institutes conduct the training on a pedagogical basis. Prussia has 50 manual training schools. The 1,514 pupils' workshops comprise 286 independent manual training schools and 238 public schools, of which 16 are auxiliary schools, where the work is obligatory, 17 are middle class schools, 41 are high schools (made up of 8 gymnasiums, 6 technical gymnasiums, 12 technical and technical high schools, and 15 boarding schools), 7 are preparatory institutes, 26 are teachers' seminaries, and 93 are boys' asylums, while the remainder consist of various kinds of private educational establishments. Five hundred and thirty-five workshops are devoted to wood carving, 527 to working in cardboard and 356 to the carpenter's bench. Of these 68 are closely connected with wood carving, 77 with preparatory roughing-out work, 35 with metal work, 28 with country timbering, 11 with wood and metal turning and 11 with modeling in clay. Over 2,200 German teachers have been taught to become instructors in manual training. Of these 954 were taught in Leipzig and 1,250 acquired training in 83 places in other parts of Germany."

FIFTY CONVULSIONS A DAY.

Well Digger Has a Terrible Experience—What the Doctors Say of His Case.

Fifty convulsions a day is the record of Eugene P. Burns, of Red Bank, N. J., whose system has been racked by them to a greater or less extent for over a week. Doctors say the case is remarkable. One day last week Burns was digging a well while the weather was intensely warm. Later in the day he went home and took to his bed.

Two days later he had a series of severe convulsions. They followed each other in rapid succession, only a few minutes elapsing between them. At first Burns had as many as 50 a day. The number had gradually grown less, until now he has only five or six. His condition is still critical.

Several local doctors have consulted on the case and attributed the convulsions to a disturbance of the nerve centers, caused by sudden changes from heat to cold, due to going down into the cold well.

YOUNG PRINCE HEADSTRONG.

Duke of York's Son Is Giving His Nurses a Hard Time of It—Is Unmanageable.

Owing to the headstrong and unmanageable disposition of young Prince Edward of York his nurses are constantly changing. Now Mme. Bricka, formerly companion of the duchess of York, has been appointed governess of the young prince, with absolute powers. She accepted only on condition that the duchess should refrain from interfering, as it spoils the children. Some time ago Prince Edward, while playing in Stafford House garden with the duchess of Sutherland's daughters, had a tussle with one three years older than himself, but the young girl threw him into the fountain basin, where he was found by his nurse in a foot of water.

Joubert's Last Words.

The last words of Commandant General Joubert were, says the East London (Cape Colony) Dispatch: "Ach, myn arme volk; o, ons arme land! God zal voor u zorgen!" (Oh, my poor people; oh, my poor land; God will help you.)

Not a War Weapon in China.

The heathen Chinee has demonstrated thus early in the game, says the Chicago Record, that he cannot be defeated with the typewriter as an offensive weapon.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

IS HE INSANE?

An Excel Man that Has Acted Very Strange.

Deputy Sheriffs Iver Allen, C. H. Woolery and C. S. Wees went to Excel last week, and brought to Warren on Friday one Christian Wold, of that town, and the body of his sixteen-year-old daughter, who died mysteriously at her home one the 5th inst. Wold is a queer character, who is troubled with various hallucinations, chief of which is the conviction that there are people who intend to poison him at the very first opportunity. About six years ago his wife died, and a year ago his daughter, aged about twelve years. On account of his strange behavoir, the latter death aroused among his neighbors some suspicion of foul play, and, when his other daughter suddenly died a few weeks ago, they determined upon an investigation. Complaint was made, and Wold was arrested and lodged in jail, and his daughter's remains were brought here for examination. The remains were taken to the court house, where Drs. Wattam and Bratrud removed the viscera, which they sent to the state university for expert examination. It is the belief of many that Wold poisoned not only his daugher that recently died, but also her sister and her mother, and that he was then, and is still, insane. Wold, however persists in his assertion that he had naught to do with causing his daughter's death. He appears to be of an intensely religious nature, and says that the Lord never commanded him to take his daughter's life, and he never did anything but what the Lord commanded him to do. After his incarcaration in the jail, he refused to drink the water brought him until after some one else had drank a portion of it in his presence. When he has worked with threshing crews, he has carried with him a lunch prepared by himself, and invariably refused to partake of a meal at the home of anyone else.—Warren Register.

Wold has been released, on account of lack of evidence against him.

To England in Two Days.

"Fast electric ships crossing the ocean at more than a mile a minute, will go from New York to Liverpool in two days," writes John Elfreth Watkins, Jr., of "What May Happen in the Next Hundred Years," in the December Ladies' Home Journal. "The bodies of these ships will be built above the waves. They will be supported upon runners, somewhat like those of the sleigh. These runners will be very buoyant. Upon their under sides will be apertures expelling jets of air. In this way a film of air will be kept between them and the water's surface. This film, together with the small surface of the runners, will reduce friction against the waves to the smallest possible degree. Propellers, turned by electricity, will screw themselves through both the water beneath and the air above. Ships, with cabins artificially cooled, will be entirely fireproof. In storm they will dive below the water and there await fair weather."—

Palaces on Wheels.

SHORTAGE

Three years ago the farmers in and about Fosston banded together and formed what has been known as the Alliance Elevator company. The object was to provide facilities whereby the grain raisers could ship their product to market, and save storage and middlemen's charges.

In casting about for managers, choice fell upon Ole Lakness and Esten Leet, both of whom owned farms in that vicinity. The men gave bond for the faithful performance of their duties, the signers being Ole, Ingebrit and Gustaf Torgerson, Esten Bergebakken, F. E. Sater, Halvor Off, T. B. Landsverk, Martin Raadklev and Ole Asleson.

About a month ago it is alleged that Lakness left the country, after disposing of his property, and, a short time after, claims began to come in from creditors, which aggregate $9,000. Leet conferred with his bondsmen and some of the farmers, and declared his inability to meet the demands.

A meeting was called, and the farmers investigated the conditions, finding, in addition to this sum, a note of $2,000, given by the managers, and other claims sufficient to bring the amount up to $13,000.

Leet has made an assignment of two farms and other property he owned, which will nearly cover the claims, and the bondsmen will probably be called upon to make good any deficiency that may exist after this property is realized upon.

Just how the matters got tangled as seriously as they have, or why the company failed to pay as others of a similar nature have done, does not appear. Of the 250 shareholders, seventy-five who were present at the meeting signed an agreement to appoint a receiver and close up the business.

Luck in Disappointed Ambition.

The boytime ambitions of some great men are curious to recall. Howard Pyle wanted to be a locomotive engineer. Senator Benjamin R. Tillman says that, in his case, a good surgeon was spoiled. The lad who is now known as Dr. T. De Witt Talmage aspired to be a stage driver at ten. Leonard Wood longed to walk a quarter-deck. The poor boy, Andrew Carnegie, in far-off Scotland, was itching to get to New York and become the owner of a great newspaper. If George Dewey had had his way as a boy, he would have been a brigadier in the Spanish war, instead of sinking Montojo at Manila. Bronson Howard was disappointed that he was not a globe-trotter. William Jennings Bryan, had he been permitted, would have become a Baptist preacher. William Dean Howells recollects that his greatest ambition was to drive mules to tow a canal boat. So the world may congratulate itself on the results of many a case of disappointed ambition.—Success.

Buys a Townsite.

Cass Lake, Minn., Nov. 24.—Judge Frank Ives, owner of the Cass Lake Times, has bought a half interest in the new townsite of Black Duck, which is located about twenty miles north of Bemidji, on the extension of the Brainerd & Northern. There is already one town platted in that vicinity, but the portion which the judge will own jointly with Mrs. Crandall, of Crookston, is located on the banks of Black Duck lake, where there is one of the very prettiest beaches and natural points for a summer resort in the state. Mr. Ives will not plat his new possession till spring.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

THURSDAY, NOV. 29, 1900.

The official tabulation of the vote of the state of Ohio shows a rather unusual and wholly unexpected result. Mr. Bryan received exactly the same vote this year that he did in 1896—474,882.

Just think of it! In the late war with Spain, a nephew of President McKinley served as a private in an Ohio regiment. In any other country it would have been looked upon as disgraceful to permit so near a relative to the chief executive to serve in any but a high official capacity.—Warren Register.

In his address before the Union League club, of Philadelphia, President McKinley has ably summed up the meaning of the recent election. He said:

"It records the unquestioned indorsement of the gold standard, industrial independence, broader markets, commercial expansion, reciprocal trade, the open door in China, the inviolability of public faith, the independence and authority of the judiciary, and peace and beneficent government, under American sovereignty, in the Philippines. Liberty has not lost, but gained in strength."

History has failed to repeat itself. For 104 years in our national life, in every presidential contest where the loser of a campaign has met the same opponent again, the former has won. The defeat of Bryan this year is the first instance where the rule has not proved true. In 1796 John Q. Adams defeated Thomas Jefferson; in 1800 Jefferson defeated Adams; in 1824 John Quincy Adams defeated Andrew Jackson, and in 1828 Jackson defeated J. Q. Adams; in 1836 Martin Van Buren defeated W. H. Harrison; in 1840 Harrison defeated Van Buren; in 1888 Benjamin Harrison defeated Grover Cleveland; in 1892 Grover Cleveland defeated Harrison; in 1896 McKinley defeated William Jennings Bryan, and in 1900 everybody knows just what happened.—Kasson Republican.

The Fergus Falls Journal has compiled the official figures of the recent election in the Seventh congressional district. The most amazing thing in the whole situation is the utter collapse of the Bryan movement. It was known before election that no candidate on the Populist or Democratic ticket was saying anything for him, but the voters seemed to fairly fear the possibility of his election. He carried but one county (Red Lake) out of eighteen in the Seventh district, and but four of the eighty-two in the state. McKinley carried the Seventh district by 8,510. Congressman Eddy got but 1,523 votes less than McKinley, but, on account of Bryan's weakness and Daly's vigorous campaign, his plurality is but 4,790, but it is, nevertheless, satisfactory in every way, and is considered above the normal Republican plurality of the district. The vote on lieutenant governor is as near normal as can be had, as voters voted for that officer without any influence or bias and simply followed party. The figures on lieutenant governor have not been secured in quite a number of counties, but those that have been secured indicate that Eddy's plurality in the district is fully 1,000 greater than Lyndon A. Smith's, which means that it is 1,000 more than the normal Republican vote. Eddy carried fifteen of the eighteen counties in the district. Governor Lind carried the district by a plurality over Van Sant of 5,050, getting a plurality in fifteen of the eighteen counties, just reversing the situation as to congressman. Prof. Anker, the Prohibition nominee, received about 2,500 votes. Four counties failed to publish the vote on Anker and Boen. Former Congressman Boen made a good showing for the Referendum, getting about 400 votes, or 45 less than enough to establish the Referendum party.

ORE AVERAGING HIGH.

Marvelously Rich Gold Discovery in Montana by Two Michigan Men.

It now seems probable that the ledge from which originated the world's richest half-acre of placer ground—Montana bar, near Helena—and from which six men in one placer season panned out $41,000,500 in gold dust, has, after many years' search, been discovered. Christopher Miller and son, formerly of Champion, Mich., who have been operating a claim in Confederate gulch, has just received the returns from a shipment of ore which averaged nearly $1,000 a ton in gold, by far the richest ore encountered in Montana for many years.

The ore comes from narrow seams, frequently only a quarter of an inch in width, which cuts through the rock in true fissure veins. Some of these seams are so rich that they are almost solid gold. The little quartz that is in the vein is bound together with strips and nuggets of gold worth $16.50 an ounce. They follow these seams, take out the rich ore, crush it in a mortar to the size of peas, pan out the free gold and ship the tailings to the smelter. They show very rich specimens. Mr. Miller, Jr., had a pin made of a nugget worth $29. The "nuggets" which they get by panning run from a few cents to as high as $29. The seams are continuous for at least 500 feet so far as developed. They are down to a depth in one place of 35 and in several places of 20 and 25 feet.

BECOMES BRITISH SUBJECT.

Another American Deserts His Native Heath and Changes His Name, Also.

J. Wadsworth Ritchie has become a British subject and has changed his name. This information comes in a personal letter received in Saturday's foreign mail. The letter reads as follows: "I must say that I was surprised to hear from an authority not to be questioned that "Jack" Ritchie has become a subject of Queen Victoria. He has also changed his name to Wadsworth, the family name of his mother, Mrs. Adair. Mr. Ritchie, or rather Mr. Wadsworth, is now in South Africa with the 'Yeomanry.'"

J. Wadsworth Ritchie, who must hereafter be called James Wadsworth, went abroad with his wife, nee Tooker, two years ago, and has not been in America since. On both sides of his family he is connected with old American families. His grandfather was Gen. James S. Wadsworth, of Geneseo, the distinguished officer in the civil war, and was killed at the battle of the Wilderness. His father, Montgomery Ritchie, of Boston, a grandson of the elder Harrison Gray Otis, married Miss Cornelia Wadsworth, daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Wadsworth.

Great Rainfall in Mobile.

The city of Mobile, Ala., has been having a reminder of the deluge. Thirty-four and one-third inches of rain fell there between May 30 and the evening of June 26. The average annual fall in that city in the last 20 years has been but 62.61 inches. The fall on Tuesday, June 26, which beat all records, was 12.57 inches. In the two hours of the morning from five to seven five inches fell and the lightning was appalling.

TIME AND SPACE are practically annihilated by the ocean cables and land telegraph systems which now belt the circumference of Old Earth in so many different directions. "Foreign parts" are no longer foreign in the old meaning of the term. Europe, Africa, Asia, are "next door" to us. What happens there to-day we know to-morrow—if we read THE CHICAGO RECORD, whose Special Cable Correspondents are located in every important city in the world outside of the United States. No other American newspaper ever attempted so extensive a service; and it is supplemented by the regular foreign news service of The Associated Press. For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

FREE A large map of the world on Mercator's Projection, about 23½x16 inches in size, beautifully printed in colors, with a large-scale map of Europe on the reverse side, will be mailed to any address free of charge on receipt of request accompanied by two 2-cent stamps to cover postage and wrapping. The maps illustrate clearly how comprehensively the special cable service of The Chicago Record covers the entire civilized world. Address The Chicago Record, 181 Madison street, Chicago.

A strange case, in which justice is circumvented by legal technicalities, has come to light just recently in a town in West Virginia. A man was sentenced to be hanged on a certain day. Two days before the execution the governor granted a respite of nine days. The sentencing judge died before the reprieve expired. The time for the resentence having passed, the prisoner cannot be resentenced on the old charge, and, the time for legal death being passed, he cannot be hanged on the original sentence. He will be released.

In a letter to Bert Walker, of this city Peter Morisette writes from Colorado Springs, Col., that his wife is in very poor health. Since leaving this city, she has lost twelve pounds in weight, and now weighs only 79 pounds. Her health is very poor, and her cough continues to grow worse. Mr. Morisette says that he expects he will have to remove to some different place, as the climate there does not agree with his wife. Peter is doing a good business in the city he is located in. Has a five-chair barber shop, and prices are good.

We regret to see this county depleted of young cattle in the manner that it is done this year, says the Warren Sheaf. Owing to the scarcity of hay and feed, farmers are compelled to sell off most of their stock, and at prices that are not best, as the market is glutted by the heavy shipments. It will take years for the farmers to get stocked up again. Just as they were getting ready to go into mixed farming more extensively, they are forced out by the peculiar condition this year, conditions that may never again be experienced in the valley.

An Iowa man, who moved to Dakota a few years ago, after trying the country, gave it up as a bad job, and left the following farewell written on the wall of his Dakota residence. "Six miles from a postoffice, twenty-five miles from a railroad, fourteen miles from a church, bothered to death with the flies; half a mile from water and a quarter of a mile from h—l. God bless our home! Gone back to Iowa to get a fresh start." Two years later, not having got a fresh start in Iowa, he came back to Dakota and found another man on his claim just thrashing a $3,000 crop of flax.

When a man keeps a store, a shop or an office, there is presumptive evidence that he wants custom; but when, in addition, he advertises in the public newspapers that he is ready to do business, he issues a direct and particular invitation to the people to come to him and trade. Everybody has had experience with merchants and professional men who seemed to be reluctant to attend to patrons, if not resentful of their presence. Therefore, we all feel more free to go to the stores and offices of those who invite us day after day through the newspaper. Advertisements are assurances of welcome and attention. —Ex.

NEW RULES.

ORDERED BY SCHOOL BOARD.

I. In case of tardiness or absence the pupil shall not be admitted to classes until he has presented an excuse stating reason for such tardiness or absence.

II. The only excuses which will be accepted for tardiness or absence are sickness of the pupil, sickness in the family, or unavoidable necessity, and of the sufficiency of the last cause the teacher shall be the judge. Absence for religious instruction or on days held sacred by the church may be excused by the teacher on written or personal application of the pupil's parent or guardian.

III. Excuses for any other cause than sickness or unavoidable necessity will be granted only on written or personal application of the parent or guardian to the teacher before such absence occurs.

IV. Any pupil absent without excuse as provided in rules I, II and III, shall be marked zero in all recitations occurring during such absence, and any pupil absent two half days or tardy twice without excuse in any four consecutive weeks, shall be suspended by his teacher, who shall immediately notify said pupil's parent or guardian and the principal. A pupil thus suspended will be reinstated by the principal on receipt of a satisfactory explanation or a guarantee from the parent or guardian that said pupil will be punctual and regular in the future. A pupil suspended a second time for unexcused absences can be reinstated only by an order from the board.

V. Any pupil absent from any regular examination or other special exercise cannot be admitted to regular work in his class until such exercise is made up in a manner satisfactory to the teacher.

VI. The scholarship average on which scholars shall be promoted shall be 75 per cent, except in classes doing high school work, where state certificates shall be the basis. Any pupil falling below this average may be placed in a lower grade at the discretion of the principal.

VII. Any pupil coming to school without proper cleanliness may be sent home to be suitably prepared for the schoolroom.

VIII. Any non-resident pupil whose deportment shall be bad enough to merit suspension, after being suspended will not be readmitted to the Thief River Falls schools for the current year.

IX. Pupils shall not be admitted to the buildings before the hours of 8:30 A. M. and 12:50 P. M. They shall pass directly home after each session. This rule is subject to such exceptions as circumstances may require.

X. Any pupil willfully or accidentally injuring school property shall be held strictly accountable for such injury, and shall make satisfactory reparation. Failure to comply with this provision shall be deemed sufficient cause for expulsion.

The foregoing rules have been drafted by the clerk of the board and principal of the school in accordance with a request made by the board at a meeting held November 24, 1900.

Dated November 27, 1900.

—Ira C. Richardson, clerk.

NOTE.

So many have been absent from school or tardy, that teachers and the board deemed it necessary to make a special effort to correct these faults, and it is hoped that all parents will aid the object of these rules, which is to insure regular and punctual attendance at school. The noon intermission has been made one hour and fifteen minutes so to afford ample time for those to return who go home for dinner. Our school is composed of many departments and costs a great deal of money, and every person in the city should be interested in getting good returns as possible for the money expended.

The work is so planned as to keep those who attend regularly at work, and when a member of a class without having made up the lessons missed, he is a hindrance to all his class mates and is unable to do good work for himself.

It is the learning of a new lesson every day that makes the scholar. Let us all do what we can to keep our children in prompt and regular attendance at school.

—Ira C. Richardson.

Notice.

Owing to the fact that several of our members will attend the annual meeting of the Northwestern Minnesota Educational association, to be held at Crookston during the Thanksgiving vacation, the meeting of the Borealis club will be held on Saturday evening, instead of Friday evening, as announced.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

FINE MILITARY POST.

Plans for enlarging the facilities of Governor's island, in New York harbor, and making it one of the best equipped military establishments of the world, as well as a center of the transport service in this country, are now under way. The work is under the direction of a board comprising Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, commanding the department of the east; Col. Gillespie, of the engineer department, and Col. Amos S. Kimball, assistant quartermaster general. These officers were selected by Secretary of War Root some time ago to survey the field and present their recommendations to the war department. The first meeting was held in Gen. Brooke's office a day or two ago.

One of the first problems taken up was that of removing the transport service depot from South Brooklyn to the island and making it the central depot of the country, with vastly increased room and facilities and more convenient of access. One great difficulty confronts the board in the proposed change—that of securing a sufficient dockage depth around the island to admit the draught of the big army transports. Some of these transports draw 26 feet of water, and thus considerable dredging will be necessary.

Here lies the problem, for it is believed that the island is bedrock, and to remove it would be a task of enormous proportions. As a preliminary to any further progress in this direction the board sent out a sounding party, and until the result is learned nothing more will be done in this direction.

Among other improvements in view is the erection of an immense supply depot, a central agency for the army posts and camps in all parts of the world. The scheme is merely tentative now and has not reached the stage where plans can be drawn to embody the board's ideas. Should the board decide to erect other buildings there will be no lack of room.

The board is also considering either the enlargement of the present barracks or the erection of new quarters. The quarters will easily accommodate a battalion of soldiers, and it is thought advisable to increase these facilities. But, with sufficient room for a battalion of men, the officers' quarters are now inadequate. There are good reasons for believing that the board's report will include a recommendation for some additional houses and other necessary buildings.

ICE HABIT IN ENGLAND.

Grows as a Result of the Constant Demand for the Article by American Travelers.

The ice habit is making great progress in England, according to Consul Halstead, due largely to the incessant clamor for ice in hotels and public places by thousands of traveling Americans. Not long ago the attendants of public places where nearly everything except ice was provided would be insulted if one complained because ice could not be had. To-day all first-class places have a few small lumps swimming in a glass dish and you pick these out with sugar tongs, and in country inns, and even in second-class public houses, they apologize for not having it. Though few saloons and restaurants have refrigerators many private residences now own them; and there would be far more general use of ice if companies were organized to distribute it from house to house. As it is one must secure it almost by favor from the fish monger.

FARMER AND A BLACK SNAKE.

Efforts to Free Himself Make Team Run Away — Rescued in Time.

Helpless in the coils of a blacksnake, and in danger of being dashed to death by a runaway team was the situation from which Andrew Van de Horn, a farmer from Liverpool, Ind., was rescued by two members of the Illinois naval militia at Indianapolis avenue and One Hundred and Second street, Chicago, near the camping ground of the soldiers.

Van de Horn was driving a load of hay into South Chicago, when the snake crawled out of the hay and pinioned his ankles. He dropped the lines during his efforts to free himself and the horses ran away.

Coxswain R. E. Russey and Yeoman G. E. Brown, of the First ship's crew, naval reserve, who were on their way from the camp, saw the runaway team, stopped the horses, and freed Van de Horn.

Live Butterfly on a Hat.

Mrs. Cash, of Athol, Mass., was at Brookside park lately, when a big buff butterfly alighted on her hat, took a fancy to it and decided it would make a nice spot for a butterfly home. The insect took possession and began laying eggs, and has remained there ever since. Mrs. Cash wears the hat on the street and other public places, and the butterfly with its nest attracts everyone's attention.

KISSES AS REWARDS.

How a Pretty Kansas School-Teacher Manages Her School.

While the practice of giving kisses to scholars as rewards for obedience to school rules may not become a popular feature of the American public school system, the plan has worked like a charm in the case of Miss Millie Daniels, a district school-teacher in Nemaha county, Kan. This plan is original with her, and was tried only after all other expedients for luring truants to the schoolroom had failed. That the plan has been a success is attested by the fact that the enrollment of the school has increased 50 per cent. in the time Miss Daniels has taught there.

Miss Daniels, who is described as unusually pretty, came to Kansas two years ago fresh from the high schools of Illinois. She found her school in Nemaha county in a bad condition. The boys were hopelessly adicted to the "hookey" habit, and when in school were unruly. All devices known to the teacher's art were tried to secure good behavior and attendance, but without avail. Finally the teacher announced her scheme, and it was sanctioned by the school board. The osculatory event takes place every Friday. The pupil who has been well behaved and attended every session of the week is allowed to kiss the teacher, while the pupil who has been absent or tardy but once is kissed by the teacher. The school board is satisfied with the workings of the plan, and has reelected Miss Daniels for another two years' term.

RECORD BROKEN.

More Gold Mined in United States Last Year Than During Any Year of Its History.

Gold mined in the United States during the year ending on December 31, 1899, exceeds that of any year in our history, and for the first time surpasses the record established in 1853, when the mines of California made their highest record of $65,000,000. The gold production of the United States was in 1899, according to the estimate of the director of the mint, $72,500,000, while no prior year had shown so high a total as that of 1853, though the total of 1898 was $64,163,000.

The annual average gold product of the United States is now double that of a decade earlier, though in this particular the growth has been no more rapid than that of other parts of the world, the world's total product in 1899 having been, according to the best estimates, $315,000,000, against $123,000,000 a decade earlier.

The rapid increase in gold production, both in the United States and elsewhere, during the last few years brings the total gold product of the half century now ending to the enormous figure of $6,665,631,000, or more than twice as much as during the entire 350 years preceding. The gold production of the world from 1492 to 1850 amounted to only $3,120,720,000, while that of the period 1851-1899 was $6,665,631,000.

TEACHING FLOCK TO SAVE.

St. Louis Colored Pastor Starts a Penny Savings Bank with Good Success.

Rev. J. F. Moreland, pastor of the Zion African Methodist Episcopal church, St. Louis, in order to stimulate the saving proclivities of the people for whose spiritual welfare he labors, has established a penny savings bank in the parlor in the parsonage at 2625 Washington street.

It is not chartered, and is capitalized only with the integrity of the pastor. The people of his flock are already taking kindly to the plan. Already they have an aggregate of $1,700 to their credit.

Regarding the plan Rev. Mr. Moreland says that he decided to introduce his savings bank to see if he could not get the poorer class of negroes to save money. He accepts deposits of from one cent to $100, paying five per cent. interest on time deposits and nothing on others. The pastor deposits the money in other banks as fast as he receives it, and makes nothing himself on the deposits.

ASHES CAST TO THE WINDS.

The Will of an Eccentric Musician Is Faithfully Carried Out by His Friends.

The remains of William Case, of Lafayette, Ind., were cremated at Cincinnati the other day. The will of Case requested that "thy" ashes be strewn to the four winds of heaven." During the Sunday afternoon concert in Eden park, the highest of the hilltop resorts at Cincinnati, the friends of Case carried the ashes to that place and literally carried out the will by strewing the ashes to the winds in the presence of a vast crowd while the band discoursed sacred music. Case was an eccentric musician.

Used to Smoke.

Soft coal is now being shipped from this country to England. But the English are not worried, says the Chicago Times-Herald. They are used to the smoke nuisance over there.

A Minority Ministry.

For the last 20 years in Denmark the party of the left has had a majority in the chamber, while the king has retained in power a ministry of the right.

IS NOT GUILTY.

Such Is the Verdict in the Case of Russell J. Whipple.

The jury in the case of the state vs. Russell J. Whipple, for the alleged killing of Bennie Moore, which had been tried at Bemidji during the past week, returned a verdict late last Wednesday night of not guilty, after being out 36 hours. It is said that the first ballot taken showed a majority for conviction.

Commenting upon the verdict, the Crookston Times says:

"The brand of justice dealt out in Beltrami county is not such as to recommend Bemidji to the world as a particularly safe place in which to live. The termination of the Whipple case in a verdict of not guilty leaves a dark blot upon the record of that village that will remain a long time. Witnesses to the shooting were numerous, and the fact that the man who committed the deed had had a half hour after the provocation in which to arm himself against his assailant, who was a much smaller man than he, and then placed himself in a position where he was sure to renew the trouble, does away with the plea of self-defense."

To Sell Eggs by the Pound.

The department of agriculture thinks that eggs should be sold by the pound rather than by the dozen, and says that there is fully 50 per cent difference in the bulk of eggs laid by fouls of different breeds. Extensive experiments have been made at government stations in the south and middle west, and all agree that there is no article of food which is subject to so much variation as eggs.

After stating the recommendation of the department in favor of the weight system, Professor C. F. Langworthy, who conducted the experiments, says:

"On what other article of food will the people be content to pay the same price for what may vary over 50 per cent in value? Or what producer of merchantable produce of any kind will consent to supply all the way up to 55 per cent more than market value and not think to add to the standard price for additional value? An apparent objection to selling eggs by weight is that they are not generally used in the household in this way. Most recipes call for eggs by number and not by weight. There is no question that weighing the eggs would be more accurate, and recipes are occasionally met with in which this method is followed.

Cost of Carelessness.

According to the annual report of the commissioner of the dead letter office, nearly one million more pieces of mail have been received at that office during the past than the previous year. The total number of pieces received is 7,536,158, of which 35,000 were letters which had no addresses at all; $44,140 in money and $1,136,645 worth of checks, notes, money orders, etc., was found in letters received there during the year. It seems almost incréditable that so much carelessness should exist, as is evidenced by such a showing.

Lots of Eggs.

The mathematical Boston Transcript startles the nation with the information that the thirteen billion hens' eggs produced in the United States this year would, set end on end, make a column nearly twice the height of the moon from the earth, when the orb of night is overhead.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

His Fun Cost Him $25.

A half breed who has been hanging around these parts for the past few months, doctoring by means of herbs, roots, barks, gums and leaves, got an extra jag of bug juice Friday evening, and started out to make himself generally offensive to the residents of south Main street. He entered one residence and tried to get familiar with the lady of the house, but the husband proved to be "at home" and fired him out, whereupon the squaw man proceeded to get even by shooting a few holes in the air. He soon found out that he was not out on the reservation and that that kind of work would not go with Chief McIntosh, who rounded up his braveship. The next morning Judge Toupin asked him to contribute $25 to the city exchequer and to leave town inside of thirty minutes, both of which he did with many promises never to take the war path around these diggings again.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

What "Bossy" Can Do.

The creamery business gets another indorsement in the following figures, taken from the Sauk Centre Avalanche, and they also show that the farmers make no mistake when they quit wheat farming exclusively and get to raising diversified products. And not the least of these are the products of the dairy or creamery. The figures shown below show the receipts for one month by a number of farmers who sell their cream to the Sauk Centre creamery, together with the number of cows milked by each. It will pay others to look these figures over. Following is the list:

Name.	Number of cows.	Amount.
A. Miller	13	$40.52
Nicholas Orth	7	21.17
Nick Minetto	14	48.76
A. Bustine	5	20.71

A New Railroad.

It is stated on apparently good authority that President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern, is planning a new railroad in the northern part of the state, to offset the marked success attending the management of the Brainerd & Northern and the Northern Pacific's new line, the Minnesota & International, now under construction. The latter will run north, and may reach Rainy lake. The territory offers valuable lumber, and this fact is said to be the chief reason to impel Mr. Hill in his decision. The exact route of his proposed line is uncertain as yet. It will strike off from the Fosston branch between that point and Leech lake into the lumber belt. Mr. Hill has not yet made an official statement of his intentions in the matter.

Could Not Fool Bisazza.

Attorney Hubachek, of Minneapolis, was at Crookston last week making an examination of S. Bisazza, who recently failed in business. The end sought was to ascertain from him his manner of conducting his business, in the hope of finding the leak that swamped his commercialship. Mr. Bisazza stood the severe test to which he was put by the shrewd questioning of the Minneapolis attorney without becoming tangled in his story, and proved himself a postmaster in the art of remaining cool and collected under trying circumstances.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

FINE MILITARY POST.

Plans for enlarging the facilities of Governor's island, in New York harbor, and making it one of the best equipped military establishments of the world, as well as a center of the transport service in this country, are now under way. The work is under the direction of a board comprising Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, commanding the department of the east; Col. Gillespie, of the engineer department, and Col. Amos S. Kimball, assistant quartermaster general. These officers were selected by Secretary of War Root some time ago to survey the field and present their recommendations to the war department. The first meeting was held in Gen. Brooke's office a day or two ago.

One of the first problems taken up was that of removing the transport service depot from South Brooklyn to the island and making it the central depot of the country, with vastly increased room and facilities and more convenient of access. One great difficulty confronts the board in the proposed change—that of securing a sufficient dockage depth around the island to admit the draught of the big army transports. Some of these transports draw 26 feet of water, and thus considerable dredging will be necessary.

Here lies the problem, for it is believed that the island is bedrock, and to remove it would be a task of enormous proportions. As a preliminary to any further progress in this direction the board sent out a sounding party, and until the result is learned nothing more will be done in this direction.

Among other improvements in view is the erection of an immense supply depot, a central agency for the army posts and camps in all parts of the world. The scheme is merely tentative now and has not reached the stage where plans can be drawn to embody the board's ideas. Should the board decide to erect other buildings there will be no lack of room.

The board is also considering either the enlargement of the present barracks or the erection of new quarters. The quarters will easily accommodate a battalion of soldiers, and it is thought advisable to increase these facilities. But, with sufficient room for a battalion of men, the officers' quarters are now inadequate. There are good reasons for believing that the board's report will include a recommendation for some additional houses and other necessary buildings.

ICE HABIT IN ENGLAND.

Grows as a Result of the Constant Demand for the Article by American Travelers.

The ice habit is making great progress in England, according to Consul Halstead, due largely to the incessant clamor for ice in hotels and public places by thousands of traveling Americans. Not long ago the attendants of public places where nearly everything except ice was provided would be insulted if one complained because ice could not be had. To-day all first-class places have a few small lumps swimming in a glass dish and you pick these out with sugar tongs, and in country inns, and even in second-class public houses, they apologize for not having it. Though few saloons and restau-

KISSES AS REWARDS.

How a Pretty Kansas School-Teacher Manages Her School.

While the practice of giving kisses to scholars as rewards for obedience to school rules may not become a popular feature of the American public school system, the plan has worked like a charm in the case of Miss Millie Daniels, a district school-teacher in Nemaha county, Kan. This plan is original with her, and was tried only after all other expedients for luring truants to the schoolroom had failed. That the plan has been a success is attested by the fact that the enrollment of the school has increased 50 per cent. in the time Miss Daniels has taught there.

Miss Daniels, who is described as unusually pretty, came to Kansas two years ago fresh from the high schools of Illinois. She found her school in Nemaha county in a bad condition. The boys were hopelessly adicted to the "hookey" habit, and when in school were unruly. All devices known to the teacher's art were tried to secure good behavior and attendance, but without avail. Finally the teacher announced her scheme, and it was sanctioned by the school board. The osculatory event takes place every Friday. The pupil who has been well behaved and attended every session of the week is allowed to kiss the teacher, while the pupil who has been absent or tardy but once is kissed by the teacher. The school board is satisfied with the workings of the plan, and has reelected Miss Daniels for another two years' term.

RECORD BROKEN.

Gold mined in the United States during the year ending on December 31, 1899, exceeds that of any year in our history, and for the first time surpasses the record established in 1853, when the mines of California made their highest record of $65,000,000. The gold production of the United States was in 1899, according to the estimate of the director of the mint, $72,500,000, while no prior year had shown so high a total as that of 1853, though the total of 1898 was $64,163,000.

The annual average gold product of the United States is now double that of a decade earlier, though in this particular the growth has been no more rapid than that of other parts of the world, the world's total product in 1899 having been, according to the best estimates, $315,000,000, against $123,000,000 a decade earlier.

The rapid increase in gold production, both in the United States and elsewhere, during the last few years brings the total gold product of the half century now ending to the enormous figure of $6,665,631,000, or more than twice as much as during the entire 350 years preceding. The gold production of the world from 1492 to 1850 amounted to only $3,120,720,000, while that of the period 1851-1899 was $6,665,631,000.

Commenting upon the verdict, the Crookston Times says:

"The brand of justice dealt out in Beltrami county is not such as to recommend Bemidji to the world as a particularly safe place in which to live. The termination of the Whipple case in a verdict of not guilty leaves a dark blot upon the record of that village that will remain a long time. Witnesses to the shooting were numerous, and the fact that the man who committed the deed had had a half hour after the provocation in which to arm himself against his assailant, who was a much smaller man than he, and then placed himself in a position where he was sure to renew the trouble, does away with the plea of self-defense."

To Sell Eggs by the Pound.

The department of agriculture thinks that eggs should be sold by the pound rather than by the dozen, and says that there is fully 50 per cent difference in the bulk of eggs laid by fouls of different breeds. Extensive experiments have been made at government stations in the south and middle west, and all agree that there is no article of food which is subject to so much variation as eggs.

After stating the recommendation of the department in favor of the weight system, Professor C. F. Langworthy, who conducted the experiments, says:

"On what other article of food will the people be content to pay the same price for what may vary over 50 per cent in value? Or what producer of merchantable produce of any kind will consent to supply all the way up to 55 per cent more than market value and not think to add to the standard price for additional value? An apparent objection to selling eggs by weight is that they are not generally used in the household in this way. Most recipes call for eggs by number and not by weight. There is no question that weighing the eggs would be more accurate, and recipes are occasionally met with in which this method is followed.

Cost of Carelessness.

According to the annual report of the commissioner of the dead letter office, nearly one million more pieces of mail have been received at that office during the past than the previous year. The total number of pieces received is 7,536,158, of which 35,000 were letters which had no addresses at all; $44,140 in money and $1,136,645 worth of checks, notes, money orders, etc., was found in letters received there during the year. It seems almost incredible that so much carelessness should exist, as is evidenced by such a showing.

Lots of Eggs.

The mathematical Boston Transcript startles the nation with the information that the thirteen billion hens' eggs produced in the United States this year would, set end on end, make a column nearly twice the height of the moon from the earth, when the orb of night is overhead.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

His Fun Cost Him $25.

A half breed who has been hanging around these parts for the past few months, doctoring by means of herbs, roots, barks, gums and leaves, got an extra jag of bug juice Friday evening, and started out to make himself generally offensive to the residents of south Main street. He entered one residence and tried to get familiar with the lady of the house, but the husband proved to be "at home" and fired him out, whereupon the squaw man proceeded to get even by shooting a few holes in the air. He soon found out that he was not out on the reservation and that that kind of work would not go with Chief McIntosh, who rounded up his braveship. The next morning Judge Toupin asked him to contribute $25 to the city exchequer and to leave town inside of thirty minutes, both of which he did with many promises never to take the war path around these diggings again.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

What "Bossy" Can Do.

The creamery business gets another indorsement in the following figures, taken from the Sauk Centre Avalanche, and they also show that the farmers make no mistake when they quit wheat farming exclusively and get to raising diversified products. And not the least of these are the products of the dairy or creamery. The figures shown below show the receipts for one month by a number of farmers who sell their cream to the Sauk Centre creamery, together with the number of cows milked by each. It will pay others to look these figures over. Following is the list:

Name.	Number of cows.	Amount.
A. Miller	13	$40.52
Nicholas Orth	7	21.17
Nick Minette	14	48.76

A New Railroad.

It is stated on apparently good authority that President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern, is planning a new railroad in the northern part of the state, to offset the marked success attending the management of the Brainerd & Northern and the Northern Pacific's new line, the Minnesota & International, now under construction. The latter will run north, and may reach Rainy lake. The territory offers valuable lumber, and this fact is said to be the chief reason to impel Mr. Hill in his decision. The exact route of his proposed line is uncertain as yet. It will strike off from the Fosston branch between that point and Leech lake into the lumber belt. Mr. Hill has not yet made an official statement of his intentions in the matter.

Could Not Fool Bisazza.

Attorney Hubachek, of Minneapolis, was at Crookston last week making an examination of S. Bisazza, who recently failed in business. The end sought was to ascertain from him his manner of conducting his business, in the hope of finding the leak that swamped his commercialship. Mr. Bisazza stood the severe test to which he was put by the shrewd questioning of the Minneapolis attorney without becoming tangled in his story, and proved himself a postmaster in the art of remaining cool and collected under trying circumstances.

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

THURSDAY, DEC. 6, 1900.

—The indications are that there will be a spirited contest for the election of a United States senator to succeed Senator Davis. Already R. G. Evans, M. E. Clapp and Tom Shevlin are avowed candidates, and several other prominent men are being "mentioned." The News hopes that there will be no candidate against Senator Nelson, who deserves to succeed himself.

W. A. Jones, commissioner of Indian affairs, in his annual report sets himself down as against the system of issuing rations to the aborigines. He says that "it encourages idleness and destroyes labor; it promotes beggary and suppresses independence, perpetuates pauperism and stifles industry, and is an effectual barrier to the progress of the Indian towards civilization." Although Mr. Jones believes that the continuance of the present system will be necessary for some time, he is in favor of issuing rations only to the old and helpless. To the healthy and young, food should be issued only in exchange for labor. In this way an incentive would be supplied to the idle Indians, who are now rusting out their lives in fruitless inactivity.

The death of Senator Cushman K. Davis is one of the severest losses that could have come to the people of Minnesota and of the nation at this time. Senator Davis was 62 years of age, and was apparently in the prime of his later manhood. He was one of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the United States, and his long career of private and public service had fitted him for signal usefulness in the senate. He was the ablest man the state of Minnesota had ever sent to Washington, and he was perhaps better equipped than any other member of the senate to deal with the many features of territorial problems which have arisen since the Spanish war. He had been re-elected only last year; and the remaining five years of his term would undoubtedly have been the most brilliant of his career, if he could have been spared.

TOAD BURIED FOR YEARS.

Laborers at West Roxbury, Mass., Make an Astonishing Discovery.

While making excavations in connection with the widening of a square at West Roxbury, a district of Boston, a workman digging at a depth of eight or nine feet, noticed a peculiar ball of dirt. He picked it up and broke it open and was surprised to find that the crust of clay contained a toad.

The workman called the attention of the boss to the find, and as they were examining it the toad began to expand. It then began to extend its legs, opened its eyes and in a minute jumped from the laborer's hand. The boss said that the road at that point had not to his knowledge been opened in 15 years, and how the toad had lived in its comatose condition all those years was the matter of the greatest wonder to all who witnessed its revival.

SUSPENDED VITALITY.

Remarkable Case of a Boy Whom Doctors Declared Dead But Who Still Lives.

A child of Mr. and Mrs. Van Alstine, of the village of Herkimer, N. Y., apparently died the other night. Physicians signed the death certificate and the undertaker was summoned. When the latter arrived the mother, who is a very religious woman, was on her knees praying that the boy's life might even yet be restored to her. The undertaker came and proceeded to embalm the remains. Just as the man was beginning work the child opened its eyes. There is every respect that the boy will recover.

MISS MUNRO MAKES RECORD.

Drives Four-in-Hand Five Days Without Feeling Slightest Fatigue.

With leaders gayly prancing, Miss Norma L. Munro's four spirited bays dashed into Norwood Park at Long Branch the other afternoon. Thus ended the last stage of a coaching trip which lasted five days, and was unique in the history of the sport.

Miss Munro not only enjoys the good fortune to be heiress to $10,000,000, but she is an accomplished sportswoman. Notwithstanding her devotion to art and literature, she finds much time for yachting and field sports. Above all she is an enthusiastic horsewoman. An accident last spring resulted in a fracture of her left wrist, but the break did not keep her long away from her favorite sports. Soon she was driving as much and as skillfully as ever.

Miss Munro began her last coaching trip last Tuesday. Her guests were her mother, Mrs. Norman L. Munro; Mrs. Robert Osborne, Albert Twyford, Charles E. Cushing and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Goodspeed. Fresh horses were put in at Hightown and Princeton was reached at six o'clock that evening. There Henry H. Munro, a student, and his friend, Mr. Waggerman, a son of a Baltimore millionaire, were added to the party. Next day the journey led as far as Bernardsville. That night the party was entertained by Mr. Blair, who is erecting a house that is to cost $1,000,000.

Miss Munro tooled the coach to Orange on Thursday through the most picturesque part of New Jersey. Thence homeward the trip was made by easy stages. Only three relays of horses were used, the last being put in at Redbank. Miss Munro was congratulated by all her friends. Not the slightest accident marred the pleasure of the trip. The weather was ideal and scenery delightful. The roads could not have been better.

Miss Munro accomplished the feat of driving four-in-hand for five days without feeling the slightest fatigue. She will have several entries in the forthcoming horse show.

TO ESTABLISH AIRSHIP LINE.

Company in Texas Prepares to Launch Its First Aerial Passenger Craft.

The first airship to be built by the Custard Airship company at its factory at Elmott, Tex., will be completed in a few days and launched on its initial trip. This company was organized several months ago with a capital stock of $100,000. It is composed of W. D. Custard, the inventor, and a number of prominent business men, who closely investigated the working model of the new aerial vehicle and pronounced it practicable.

The company endeavored to manufacture machines in time to establish a line of them to ply between New York and Paris during the progress of the exposition at the French capital, but their construction was delayed, and it will be several months before regular lines of airships will be established between the principal cities of this country, should the one which is to be launched next week prove the success that is claimed for it.

The complete machine weighs 250 pounds and it has a capacity of from three to five people. Its maximum speed is expected to be 100 miles per hour. The first trip will be from Elmott to Waco, a distance of 20 miles.

PALMER LOSES MODEL GUESTS

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Seixas Leave for New York After a Stay of Twenty-Two Years.

The other day for the first time in 22 years and ten months room 358 of the Palmer house, Chicago, was vacant. The interesting part of it is that during all that time it has been occupied by one couple, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Seixas, and in their depature for New York, where they will make their future home, the hotel lost its star boarders. Mr. Seixas was a member of the firm of Cook, Lyman & Seixas, which was for a number of years engaged in the wholesale hat business on Market street. About a year ago the firm went out of business. It was on January 4, 1878, that Mr. and Mrs. Seixas went to the Palmer house. They selected room 358, where they remained all during their long stay, and every Sunday morning promptly at eight o'clock Mr. Seixas appeared at the cashier's window and settled his bill for the week. He never missed a payment and never varied more than a minute or two from exactly eight o'clock. The stay of Mr. and Mrs. Seixas exceeds by several years that of any other guest of the house.

THRONE OR WEDDING.

Bill to Enable Wilhelmina to Marry and Yet Remain Queen.

In order to hold the throne the Dutch sovereign cannot marry without the consent of her parliament. She may marry otherwise, but in that case would inexorably have to renounce the throne. Therefore two bills are about to be put before the states general, the first giving the parliamentary consent to Queen Wilhelmina's marriage to Duke Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and the second granting full naturalization to the duke, as well as deciding upon his future title. Temporarily this title is that of prince consort. Preparations for the wedding are being hurried along.

FIGHT TRUST WITH CONVICTS.

State of Kansas Has Evolved a New Way of Fighting the Octopus.

Kansas, always unique and usually spectacular in its methods, says the Denver Post, has found an effective way of fighting the trust that controls the binding-twine product of the country. This summer the trust has not fattened on Kansas. All the twine it has sold in the Sunflower state has been at half its usual price and customers were none too plentiful even then.

Last spring the Kansas state government began the manufacture of twine in the penitentiary. Convict labor was utilized so that the cost of the product was reduced to the minimum. For fear that the demand would exceed the supply, the sale of the twine was restricted to the farmers of the state, a restriction it is proposed to remove, as during the coming winter a large number of convicts will be employed constantly in the manufacture of a supply of twine sufficient to meet the needs of several states.

From the viewpoint of the Kansas farmer the experiment has been an unqualified success. It has reduced the price of twine to one-half the former cost and the prisoners in the penitentiary have not injuriously affected any class of labor employed in the state, which has no factory in which twine is manufactured. Were there such factories there, vigorous protests no doubt would be made against the employment of convict labor. As there is no class of labor affected, the scheme is regarded by Kansas as an unmixed blessing.

OLD MINE BRINGS WEALTH.

Young Man's Supposed Poor Investment Realizes a Snug Fortune.

From poverty to a snug fortune is the step made by Howard Smiley, of Marshall, Mich. Smiley is the son of the late Dr. J. F. Smiley, of Marshall, well known in state politics. His wife was Miss Clover Roe, daughter of Mrs. Grace Duffie Boylan, who is a special writer on a Chicago paper. Howard was rather a wild fellow, and his father's fortune, or the share of it that came to the boy, is so tied up that it cannot be used until Howard is 35. He is now 23. His father's life insurance is all he had. This, amounting to $1,500, he invested in a copper mine at Houghton, which experts pronounced to be worked out. This was last fall, and Howard began to believe the experts were correct. He had been compelled to take up the business of selling fruit trees to get a living and was at work in Kalamazoo county when an offer of $52,000 was made him for his share in the old mine. A new lead had been discovered, and the opinion of the experts proved worthless. Smiley has gone to Houghton to look into the matter and see if his mine cannot be made to produce more than the price he has been offered.

GIRL STUDENTS EXPELLED.

Normal Scholars at Trenton, N. J., Disciplined for Making a "Junior Raid."

Five girl members of the junior class of the state normal school at Trenton, N. J., have been expelled and three suspended for acting as the ringleaders in a junior raid on the seniors' rooms and for participating in a "nightgown parade" about the lawn adjoining the boarding hall.

The facts became known the other day. The faculty kept the affair secret, but it is said had the ringleaders brought before them before the session closed in June. Two girls were expelled at once and the other six were sent home and not allowed to wait for commencement. The alleged raid and parade is said to have occurred on the night of June 11.

It is said that they were officially notified that they need not come back when school opens in September. The names of the girls expelled are being carefully kept secret.

HEN MAKES HIM $100.

While Hatching Out Her Brood in Granary Price of Wheat Advanced.

Because one of his hens selected a bin containing about 800 bushels of wheat as the place to hatch out a brood of young chickens, A Clay county, S. D., farmer is $100 richer than he otherwise would have been. The farmer, upon deciding to market his surplus wheat, which he had carried over from last season, proceeded to his granary, where he found that the hen had taken possession. He decided not to disturb the hen, but to wait until the young chickens were hatched. In the meantime the price of wheat advanced until the farmer discovered he had gained $100 by allowing the hen to "set it out."

Arsenic Eaters in Europe.

The practice of taking arsenic in minute doses is very prevalent among the peasantry of the mountainous districts of Austro-Hungary and France. They declare that this poison enables them to ascend with ease heights which they could not otherwise climb.

These, the Dakota Farmer thinks, are the ideas that should constitute farmers' politics, and that they compromise an excellent platform, every thorough and up-to-date tiller of the soil will admit: "Fewer acres, better tilled; more stock and better filled; more that's finished, less that's raw; more of self and less of law; less of looking round for snaps, more upon our own broad raps; more that is worth living for; more of merit, less of tricks; these are farmers."

He was to finish the pictures and mail them within ten days. It has now been about three weeks and nothing has been seen of the pictures since, and those who patronized the man are beginning to think that they have been "done" properly.

Prison Life in Maine.

A well-known water-front character in Bath, Me., recently spent a month in jail at Wiscasset and rather enjoyed it. The warden treated the man leniently, allowed him to go fishing and enjoy other reliefs to the monotony of prison life and used him as a mail messenger and errand boy. One night the prisoner was delayed on a mission to the post office and did not arrive at the jail until after six, when the institution is closed for the night. The warden was waiting for the delinquent and gave him a small lecture, ending by saying: "If you are as late as this again I shall lock you out!" The prisoner was careful to be on time after that.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

GREAT AIRSHIP'S TRIAL.

Monster Aerial Vessel Traveled Ten Miles in Switzerland and Proved Successful.

United States Consul General Dubois, at St. Gall, has sent to the state department an interesting account of the trial of a great airship, witnessed by him, which took place at Manzell, on Lake Constance, Switzerland.

The great ship, 407 feet long and 39 feet in diameter, and containing 17 separate balloon compartments, filled with hydrogen gas, was floated out upon the waters of the lake on a raft. Count Zeppelin and Eugene Wolf, the famous explorer, together with Baron Bassus, who accompanied the party as meteorologist, were in charge of the trial. When all was made ready, the balances were adjusted, so as to give the ship an ascending direction, the propellers were set in motion, and with the wind blowing strongly at 26 feet per second, the cigar-shaped vessel made a slow, graceful ascent and started on her cruise through the air. For a total distance of ten miles the ship soared high above the lake, reaching at one time an elevation of 1,300 feet above its waters, when it suddenly stopped short, settled, and floated safely on the water. The cause of the sudden stoppage in its flight was a slight mishap to the steering apparatus, but this happening created no danger, as the vessel rested upon the surface of the lake, without taking any water.

The trip consumed about 50 minutes. The fastest time made was five miles in 17½ minutes. The ship weighs 22,000 pounds, and cost considerably over $200,000.

TO EDUCATE FILIPINOS.

The Commission Considering Plan of Sending Promising Young Men to This Country.

The Philippine commissioners contemplate sending natives of the islands to the United States to study. The first news concerning this important new policy was brought by a letter from Bernard Moses, professor of history in the University of California and a member of the Philippine commission, in a letter just received by President Benjamin Ide Wheeler, of Berkeley, Cal. The letter says in part:

"From observations already made, I am inclined to think that we shall find among the young people of the islands a large number of eager and competent students, and I hope some arrangement may be made by which from time to time a goodly number may be sent to the schools of America. It may perhaps be found advisable to render some of them assistance from public funds. It is quite likely that in this way we can help to bring the people of these islands to appreciate somewhat the civilization of the United States and to mark the difference between America and Spain."

SCIENTIST GRATIFIED.

Makes Discoveries in Oregon Valuable to Studies in Paleontology—Rare Specimens Secured.

Discoveries of paleontological material are reported in a recent letter to President Wheeler, dated Monument, Ore., from Prof. John C. Merriam, who is at the head of the expedition sent to the John Day fossil fields in eastern Oregon by the University of California. It says in part:

"So far we have been operating in the northern range of the Blue mountains. Among our specimens are quite a number of fine skulls, some of which are the best that have been found here. One of our most interesting finds is a new geological formation which is a very important feature of this region, both geologically and paleontologically."

Collections are also being made by this expedition for the University of Munich, one of the chief seats of paleontological learning in the old world.

Experiments with "Orpheus."

In Elberfeld, a German town of great musical activity, an attempt was recently made to give Glueck's "Orpheus" with a barytone, instead of a contralto, in the leading role. But this unconventional performance had to be given up, owing to the illness of the barytone who had learned the role. It was not long ago that "Faust" was sung in Cologne with a tenor as Siebel. The French composers are especially coddled in this Rhenish town, where Saint-Saens' "Phryne" is soon to be given for the first time in Germany.

Oldest Known Vegetables.

Onions and cucumbers are two of the very oldest known vegetables. Like peas, the Egyptians knew them at least 30 centuries ago.

HEIR DEPORTED AS PAUPER.

Frugality Plunges Joseph Jones, of Hackensack, N. J., Into Expensive Predicament.

Frugality plunged Joseph Jones, a resident of Hackensack, N. J., into an expensive predicament. He was deported as a pauper by the immigrant officials after having collected a legacy in England and sent the money to his wife in Hackensack. When he returned to New York with only a few pennies in his pocket he was proclaimed a pauper and deported to England by the first steamship. Jones was notified about one month ago that a relative had died in England leaving him $2,000. Although he has lived in the United States ten years he never took out naturalization papers. He went to England and collected his legacy and sent practically all of the money to Postmaster Jarvis, of Tenafly, N. J., for safekeeping until his return. He first, however, provided himself with a ticket on the Ivernia and calculated every item of expense. He planned to land in that city with just enough to pay car fare to his New Jersey home.

Great was his chagrin when the authorities refused to regard his car fare money as sufficient evidence of financial responsibility. He told the story of his legacy and was greeted with incredulous smiles. He was permitted to send a letter to his wife, but the letter was delayed in transmission. When Mrs. Jones did receive it she hurried to the barge office. There she learned that the ship on which her husband was had sailed. She heard from him the other day and sent money for his return.

REGULATES TEMPERATURE.

A New York Doctor Who Can Raise or Lower It by Means of a Secret Electrical Apparatus.

Dr. C. C. Carroll, of 21 East Twenty-fourth street, New York city, the other day gave a demonstration at his office of certain effects that can be produced on patients by Tesla's apparatus generating alternating currents of high frequency and potential.

He has been using the instrument in his practice for nearly a month, and is sanguine regarding its efficiency in treating tuberculosis and other maladies. In some instances he combines the use of a drug with his electrical apparatus, but he showed at his demonstration that with electricity alone he could raise or lower a person's temperature and retard or accelerate the pulse inside of a minute.

None of the apparatus was exhibited except a wire terminating in a slender vacuum tube, in which might be seen a tremulous glow of faint violet light. A bulb at the end of this tube was applied to the patient's body. Dr. Carroll did not feel at liberty to furnish any information about the machine or differentiate it from those employed by other physicians who administer electricity, but presumably the apparatus was one of the several forms of "oscillator" described by Tesla two years ago in his address to the American Electro-Therapeutical association. Dr. Carroll says that he is the first physician to use this instrument.

UNITED STATES' POPULATION.

May Be 77,000,000—Census Officials Hard at Work on the Returns.

Director of the Census Merriam says that over 10,000,000 names have been counted by the force in the census office. The accounts of enumerators are now being settled at the rate of 1,000 a day. Ten thousand enumerators have received the balance due them and their accounts are closed. Eleven hundred young women are employed in tabulating the returns from enumerators. Each operator on the punching machine is expected to finish 600 cards each day.

It is estimated that the population of the United States will be between 76,000,000 and 77,000,000. Some of the officials, however, believe the total population will not exceed 72,000,000. The complete returns will be given out about December 1.

NEW COMET IS BRIGHTER.

The Discovery of Dr. Brooks, of Geneva, Is Said to Be Approaching the Demon Star.

Dr. Brooks, of Geneva, N. Y., secured excellent observations of his new comet the other morning. The sky was clear. The comet appeared brighter than at the previous observations. The nucleus, which is starlike, is elongated, and with coma and tail. The comet forms a very beautiful telescopic object. The position was right ascension 2 hours 52 minutes 40 seconds, declination north 36 degrees 21 minutes. The comet is now in the head of Medusa, about 4 degrees south of Algol, and is approaching the Demon star.

Juvenile Smokers in Japan.

The Japan Times of a recent date says: "It is reported that a bill prohibiting smoking by young people was presented at the house of representatives by Mr. Nemoto and four others on Wednesday. The main purpose of the bill is to the effect that smokers under 18 years of age shall be punished by a fine ranging in amount from ten to one yen and the confiscation of the pipes and fittings used by the offenders. The bill is said to have been drawn up on the model of similar enactments prevailing in Germany and the United States of America."

Lots of Comets.

Astronomers tell us that in our solar system there at at least 17,000,000 comets.

The Stock of the First State Bank.

A deal was made last week whereby the stock of the First State Bank of Thief River Falls which was formerly owned by J. W. Wheeler and L. Ellington, of Crookston; C. Hendrickson, of Grafton, N. D., and A. G. Gallasch, of St. Paul, was purchased by a number of local business men. Messrs. C. L. and H. G. Dobner have always owned, and will continue to own, the controlling stock of this bank, which is one of the strongest financial institutions in the northern part of the state, and the people of this city will be pleased to learn that the entire stock will now be owned by residents of Thief River Falls. The stock bought by the local men cost them $1.50 on the dollar, which shows that the bank has been well managed in the past.

A True Bill.

Whereas, a certain person, whose name is to deponent unknown, being a person of unfeeling and inhuman disposition, not having the love of humanity before his eyes, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil, did recently, with force and arms, in the night-time, with intent to deprive the true owner of its use and benefit and appropriate the same to his own use, and wear the content thereof, willfully, maliciously, wrongfully and feloniously steal, take and drag away one trunk, then and there the property of Milton H. Converse, and alleged to contain the following valuable articles, to-wit:

Three (3) socks (not mates), of the value of fifteen (15) cents; one (1) colored shirt, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, of the value of seventy (70) cents; several pants of the value of three (3) dollars, marked down—to ninety-nine (99) cents; one (1) cob pipe—thrown in; fourteen (14) pounds of first-class mail matter, consisting mainly of feminine correspondence, and cheap at any price: against the peace and dignity of the said Milton H. Converse and the state of Minnesota, and contrary to the statutes thereof!—

Now, therefore, if the said evilly disposed person shall, will, and does, return the said articles, with the same washed and the laundry bill marked paid, he will be freely forgiven and welcomed to the bosom of his family; and may keep the socks: otherwise the dogs of the law will be put upon his track, and he will be eternally condemned. -- Red Lake Falls Courier.

Not as Represented.

During the fall, Albert Kleven, of Crookston, has busied himself cruising the country about the Red lake, and, from data secured by him, has located a number of Crookston people upon claims, receiving from them a consideration for so doing.

A number of men, whom he has located, recently returned from the land and claimed that the tracts were not as represented by Mr. Kleven. Instead of being good, with valuable timber growing thereon, the claim is made, in some instances that the land is in the midst of a tamarac swamp.

Suit was begun before Judge Holt, at Crookston, last Saturday by Carl B. Peterson and Peder L. Berg, in which Mr. Kleven is charged with securing money under false representations. The case was put over until Dec. 24th, in order to secure witnesses, Mr. Kleven giving a bond for $300 for his appearance at that time.

LOTS OF WOLVES.

A Large Number of Them Around Here.

Wolves are reported to be more numerous around here this winter than for some time previous, and they are causing farmers considerable annoyance. Since the cold weather has commenced, they became quite bold, and it is feared that they will do considerable damage before spring. One farmer living in the eastern part of Marshall county reports to the NEWS that, while enroute to this city Monday, he saw six large wolves in a bunch. They did not offer to attack him, however.

A BET PAID

By Senator O. H. Myran, of Ada.

During the campaign, Senator O. H. Myran, of Ada, who represents Red Lake county in the state senate, bet with John C. Narum, of Home Lake, on the vote of that town on governor. By the terms of the bet, Myran has to pay Narum one Norwegian herring for every vote Lind got in Home Lake in excess of the vote cast for Van Sant. As Lind got fourteen more votes than Van Sant, the fourteen herring were sent to Home Lake last Saturday, accompanied by the Ada band.

The procession started from Ada at 7:30 p. m. sharp, led by Albert Myran. Then came the band, in a four-horse wagon, with a Democratic mule appropriately arranged and the herring tied to his back. The blow-out at Narum's was held in the afternoon, and there was a concert and banquet at the Grand Hotel, Twin Valley Saturday night. Invitations were sent out, and were entitled "Invitations to the Funeral of the Democratic Party."

A Plucky Little School Ma'am.

The village of Raymond, S. D, can boast of a school ma'am that, by her industry, pluck and frugality, is setting an example that is worthy of imitation by her butterfly sister farther east. For several winters she has driven three miles to a country school house, built her own fires and taken care of her horse. Then, instead of putting her money into fancy toggery, invests it in stock. She now has twenty-seven head of fine cattle. She proposes to keep right on earning more money, buying more cattle and earning the money to hire them kept, until (we suppose) some young fellow comes along with an equal supply of gumption to start a partnership ranch. In this village we found a young fellow holding down a box of codfish, wasting his best energies in pulling death and destruction from a cigarette, while he complained that "there were no chances to get a start in that forsaken country." We intimated that he might be mistaken, and requested him to ask Miss Nelson, the plucky little school ma'am, about it.—The Farmer.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

THURSDAY, DEC. 13, 1900.

Red Lake Falls has more water powers than it knows what to do with, and has offered to give gratis one of the ten thousand-dollar ripples and a chunk of the hill to any firm that will locate a paper mill there.

No man has done more for the success of the Republican party, or is held in higher esteem by the people of Minnesota, than Senator Knute Nelson. He should be elected unanimously to succeed himself before a successor to Senator Davis is chosen.

The fire marshal law of Massachusetts is being favored for adoption in several Western states. The supporters of the law say that it has resulted in the reduction of fire losses in Massachusetts, the law having checked incendiarism. Briefly, the plan provides for inquests on fires similar to those now held by coroners. Thus the chance of detection of incendiaries is increased.

Beef at $1.50 per pound, live weight, would seem to be a fairly good price, but it was paid for a steer at an auction sale held in Chicago last week. The animal weighed 1,430 pounds, and, consequently, the price paid was $2,145. The steer will be killed for Christmas beef by a New York firm. This is the highest price ever paid for an animal for slaughter.

The News would like to see Robert G. Evans, of Minneapolis, elected to succeed Senator Davis, and he is the only Minneapolis man thus far mentioned that can command any support from the people of the state outside of the Twin Cities. If the representatives of Minneapolis fail to unite upon Mr. Evans, the people of this section would naturally favor Gen. Clapp as second choice.

There seems to be an evident desire upon the part of some of the enemies of Senator Knute Nelson to have the successor of Senator Davis elected before a successor of Senato Nelson is elected—thus getting the legislature into a wrangle over both the Minnesota senatorships. Mr. Nelson is the first choice of 90 per cent of the Republicans of Minnesota, and he should be elected to succeed himself before the unexpired term of Senator Davis is filled.

Alex McKenzie, the notorious North Dakota politician, has announced that he will take part in the senatorial fight in Minnesota this winter. Mr. McKenzie has been hampered in some of his schemes by Senator Nelson, and, evidently is actuated by motives of revenge to secure the defeat of the man who has so ably represented this state in the senate. The people of this state demand the re-election of Senator Nelson, and, if the legislature fails to do its duty, there will be trouble.

M. J. Dowling, who will be elected speaker of the Minnesota house of representatives, when that body meets next month, is a most remarkable man. Years ago, when Mr. Dowling was a poor farm boy, he was caught in an old-fashioned Minnesota blizzard. When the blizzard got through with him, he was so badly frozen that he lost both feet, his left hand and almost all of his right hand. Starting with this tremendous handicap, Mr. Dowling has succeeded in making himself felt as one of the keenest and most influential politicians in the state. He has served two terms as chief clerk of the Minnesota house, and also has spent a term as secretary of the National League of Republican Clubs.

John P. Holland, the inventor of the submarine boat, bearing his name, which was recently accepted, after severe tests, by the United States government, writes, with glowing pen, in the December number of the North American Review of "The Submarine Boat and Its Future." As an engine of war, this style of boat makes it impossible for a hostile fleet to approach the shore of any country which possesses it in sufficient numbers, although it is possible that tacticians may succeed in finding a means of meeting the menace of this veritable "sea-devil." Mr. Holland insists, however, that it is in connection with the pursuits of peace that the submarine boat presents the most fascinating possibilities—as a factor in commerce and as an instrument of science. On short trips—such as the course across the English Channel—the submarine boat will be the favorite means of travel:

"There will be no seasickness, because in a submerged boat there is absolutely no preceptible motion. There will be no smells to create nausea, for the boats will be propelled by electric power taken from storage batteries, which will be charged at either end. The offensive odor that causes so much discomfort in surface boats is due to the heated oil on the bearings and to escaping steam. There will be no steam on these submerged channel boats, and the little machinery necessary to drive them will be confined within an air-tight chamber. There will be no collisions, because the boats coming and the boats going will travel at different depths—say, one at twenty, the other at forty feet. The water overhead may be crowded with large and small craft, but the submarine will have a free, unobstructed course. She will be kept absolutely true to this course by means of cables running from shore to shore. On these cables will run an automatic steering gear attached to the submarine. Storms and fogs will have no existence for the traveler, for weather cannot penetrate below the surface of the water. There, everything is smooth and clear. The appointments on such a vessel will be finer than anything that can be furnished on the surface. There will be no dampness, no stickiness. The passenger will enter a handsomely fitted cabin at Dover. Electric lights will make it cosey and bright. Neither the cold of winter nor the extreme heat of summer will be felt. The temperature under water is about the same all the year round.

T. R. F.'S MEMORIAL

To the Congress of the United States.

The following memorial addressed to congress will be circulated in this city in a few days, and that it will be liberally signed is not to be doubted. In is a very clear statement of the facts that at present exist, and, it is to be hoped that the petition, which is as follows, will receive the attention of congress:

TO THE HONORABLE, THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

We, the undersigned citizens and business men of the state of Minnesota, respectfully pray your honorable body to take such action as may be necessary to secure the opening for settlement and cultivation of the rich agricultural land lying within the counties of Polk, Red Lake and Marshall, in the state of Minnesota, now reserved for, but abandoned by, the Red Lake band of Chippewa Indians, and being the western portion of the Red Lake Indian Reservation.

And we do herewith set forth the following facts and conditions which lead us to make petition as above.

SITUATION.

This portion of the reservation is in the form of a wedge, with its base at the Beltrami county line on the east, bounded on the north by the reservation line and on the south by the Clear Water river, with the apex at Thief River Falls, Minnesota. The Red Lake river flows from east to west through the middle of the tract, and is navigable between the Red lake and Thief River Falls.

AREA.

The lands in question comprise about eleven townships, or 253,440 acres, more or less, sufficient to provide farms of 160 acres each for about 1,584 settlers.

CHARACTER OF LAND.

The land is slightly rolling prairie, lying high above the river, with groves of mixed hardwood and poplar, and a belt of similar timber along the river bank. The soil is mainly A 1 farming land, and, with a trifling amount of drainage to the river, every acre of it would be at at once fit for the plow.

POPULATION.

About twenty Indian cabins are located at wide intervals along the north bank of the Red Lake river accomodating approximately fifty Indians during the coldest of the winter; at all other times these cabins are closed and boarded up, as is the custom of the Chippewas, and the Indians lead a migratory life, living in tepees and seldom remaining over one week at a place.

COMPARATIVE POPULATION.

There are not to exceed twenty-five males of voting age upon the one-third of Red Lake county occupied by the Indians, or less than one to each ten thousand acres. (There are no Indians living upon the small portions of the reservation which lie within Marshall and Polk counties.) The vote of the Red Lake county outside the reservation at the last election was 2,160, or one actual voter for each 220 acres.

A most liberal estimate of the Indian population in Red Lake county could not exceed 75 persons, the white population of the same county by the census of 1900 is 12,195.

REASON FOR INDIAN ABANDONMENT.

This open country is devoid of game and the rivers are by no means so prolific fisheries as are the waters of Red Lake and its tributaries, it is therefore apparent why the Chippewas prefer the timbered country about the lake, which is full of big game and valuable fur bearing animals, and which yields them a livelihood by hunting and fishing and an additional revenue from successful trapping.

EFFECT OF WHITES ON INDIANS.

The Indians who are now occupying the western portion of the reservation, surrounded by whites and cut off from the main portion of their band and the restrictive influence of the agency by the heavy swamps lying west from Red lake, are in a deplorable state of moral and physical degeneration. They contract all of the vices and none of the virtues of the race by which they are surrounded and have become a prey to their appetites for alcoholic stimulants and permeated with filthy diseases.

EFFECT OF RESERVATION ON SURROUNDING PROPERTY.

The damage to the fine agricultural property directly north of the reservation by reason of its being closed to settlement is incalculable. The most detrimental features of the situation are three in number.

First. These lands are mostly flat and, although lying well above the river, ditches are imperatively necessary at certain seasons of the year to assist the natural water courses in carrying off surface water. The narrow strip of forbidden territory lying between this section and its natural drainage outlet, Red Lake river, renders it impossible of drainage and greatly retards the development of this rich farming country.

Second. The reservation lands, abandoned by the Indians (except the north bank of the river) and entirely uncultivated by them, are covered with pools which collect the surface water and form natural breeding places for numberless myriads of flies and mosquitoes which, at certain seasons, spread over the surrounding country in dense clouds. Stock raising would be a highly profitable occupation, were it not for this pest of insects, which discourages cattle raising in the vicinity.

Third. The geographical situation of this portion of the reservation is such as to cut off a large number of farmers from their natural market and to compel them to haul their crops to more distant shipping points or make long and unnecessary detours. The unimproved condition of the roads across the reservation renders them impassable, except under most favorable circumstances, and the hostility of the Indians when in an intoxicated condition, which is frequently the case, makes hauling across the reservation a dangerous enterprise.

ATTITUDE OF THE INDIANS.

The Agency Indians, at the present time, look with suspicion upon the movement for the opening of the reservation; while making no use of it themselves, they are keenly alive to the value of the land and fear being deprived of it without adequate remuneration.

ATTITUDE OF THE WHITES.

The whites of the surrounding territory, while equally cognizant of the value of the land for agricultural porposes, do not so much wish the land for their own holding as do they desire its opening to cultivation and settlement under any conditions which may be suitable to the government and acceptable to the Indians, to the end that this tract of waste land, which extends into, and divides a busy community, may cease to be a clog upon the wheels of progress and an actual damage to surrounding property.

Palaces on Wheels.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook; one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

A Norman county school district has a peculiar condition of affairs to report. For three months a teacher has gone to the temple of wisdom every day, fired up, and remained waiting for the scholars, who never came. The county issues warrants and pays the interest until they are cashed.

Weather prophets familiar with the peculiarities of our weather look for heavy and continued snows through the winter. The season begins, so those who remember the winter of 1886 say, like the winter of that year, when there was exceedingly heavy snow all winter, and cattle on the ranges died by hundreds and thousands. No repetition of that experience is expected, for the reason that a different system prevails now on the ranges, and some provision is made to care for live stock in severe weather. But stockmen who are a little short of hay would have been pleased to see the open weather continue longer and the snow hold off.

They have a new dissipation down at Crookston, which, on account of its dangerous character, will probably become general. The Times says: A "whirligig" has created havoc among the rising generation on Jerome's addition. Some inventive genius bored a hole in the ice into which he fitted a post, and a sweep was pivoted onto this to the long end of which a hand sled was attached. The load got on and a boy at the short end would whiz them around the circle so fast that they were invariably thrown off. In this manner several have been quite severely injured, among them a son of Geo. Logfiel, who is under the physician's care for injuries received on Sunday. The dangerous plaything has since that date been removed.

HEROIC AMID DANGERS.

English Women in South Africa Have in Many Instances Proved Their Mettle.

During the progress of the war in South Africa many stories of individual heroism have been told. A Frenchman writing from Bloemfontein, testifies that the English women there are remarkable for the cheerful stoicism with which they endured the anxiety and discomforts of recent conditions. He indulges, also, in other comments that are interesting.

"One may observe among English women," he says, "the same thing in the matter of gracefulness that one notices among the men in the matter of politeness. There is no mean. Either the English woman is extremely graceful, pretty, elegant and even recherche, or else she is quite ridiculous, ill dressed, sharp-featured and plain—the sort of woman for whom there is no word in the French language. The great poet Heine wrote once that a man who could see and understand no woman was plain. I always believed him. Alas! I had not seen certain English women, and Heine could never have seen them either.

"An English woman who is pretty and clever possesses abundant charm, but I have seen French women by no means pretty who have made themselves so pleasing that they were to be preferred to classic beauties. In England, however, when a woman misses being good-looking the case is hopeless. She knows not how to walk, talk, please or narrate, and is compelled to take refuge in heroic endurance of her plainness."

PLAY IN EUROPEAN BANDS.

Colored Musicians from America Find a Welcome in Foreign Countries.

Many years ago there were colored musicians in our military bands, and England was not singular in that respect, says the London Telegraph. Both in France and in Germany the cymbal and the kettledrum players were "near neighbors to the sun." In the latter country their performances were not confined to the instruments just named and Frederick William I. of Prussia had, in fact, a whole orchestra of them. They were mainly recruited from the African colony Groax-Friederichsburg, founded by his grandfather, and even when that Prussian possession was sold to the Dutch in 1720 the dark-hued virtuosi still continued to be imported. They were quartered in a special barracks in the Friederichstadt, and the fact is perpetuated in the name of Moor street in Berlin, and which was the site of their habitation. Gradually they disappeared from all the European bands, but it has been decided to revive this old fashion practice, and two colored performers are forthwith to join the musicians of one of the regiments of the Prussian guards. Queen Victoria has many more subjects of dusky hue than any other sovereign, and some of them would look very picturesque on horseback at the head of our regiments."

DEATH A PUBLIC BENEFIT.

Lord Bute's Demise Will Help Pay the Cost of the War in South Africa.

It is seldom that the death of an eminent man is viewed as a public blessing, yet there are sordid men here, says a London paper, who view the recent demise of the marquis of Bute as in a measure providential. The death rate upon his estate will amount to a very considerable sum. At a rough estimate Lord Bute's possessions may be set down at £5,000,000, the larger portion of which consists of money drawn out of or still invested in the Bute docks. When 13 years ago the docks ceased to be his private property he left about £2,000,000 in the company and took about £1,500,000 out. Whoever the chancellor of the exchequer may be in the new administration a handsome windfall awaits him—a far larger one than that which, more than half a century ago, made Sir Robert Peel blush.

The late marquis of Bute at the time of his death was engaged in very extensive renovations at his castle in Cardiff. During the work of extending the west wall, which has been going on through the summer, the workmen came across a Roman arch in a fine state of preservation.

SCARED BY INDIAN YELL.

The Practical Joke That Was Played on Surveyors by a Band of Comanches.

A crowd of United States surveyors and allotting agents were recently working in the reservation of the Comanche Indians, surveying, establishing corner stones and getting everything ready to divide the land in quarter sections, says the San Francisco Argonaut. The Indians did not take very kindly to the division and allotment of their land, and, seeing that the whites were scared, they decided to act. The surveyors were all tenderfeet from Washington. Suddenly, without warning, their camp was invaded by a yelling, shooting band of 500 Indians in war paint and feathers. The surveying party could not stand the pressure and started out for the settlements along the Texas line and kept up their flight, pursued by the Indians, until they crossed the state line. Then they telegraphed to Fort Sill and the commander there sent out a large cavalry force to protect the surveyors. The general supposition is that a lot of cowboys and young bucks played a practical joke.

PURVEYOR TO JAILBIRDS.

Not an Exalted Position for a Man to Hold, But It Is Certainly Profitable.

The jail has a new butler. At least he is new in comparison with his predecessor, who held the position for 12 years or more, and made a small fortune out of it. The old butler was Pete Moran, a red whiskered, emaciated consumptive, who was compelled to go to Virginia a few months ago on account of his health. The new butler is Sam Shapiro, whose pecuniary instinct is as sharp as an unsheathed dagger.

Every day about 4:30 p. m. Shapiro enters the jail with a huge basket in each hand, and a third one, all heavily loaded with wares, suspended about his neck, says the Kansas City Journay. There is tobacco—for this is the very first need of the prisoners—bread, cakes, apples, candy, writing tablets, pencils and such other small things as the men in the cells want and can buy. Shapiro makes the round of the cells. When he goes in his baskets are full. He comes out with them empty. Probably fearing competition, Shapiro very cunningly refuses to say much about the extent or profits of his little business.

"Moran made a profit out of it," he said recently. "When he left town there was $3,000 in the post office in his name besides deposits in the banks. But there ain't no such money in it now. Things are higher and the profits closer. Moran used to make between $2,000 and $3,000 a year out of it. He stayed in the building all the time, from morning till night, ran errands for the prisoners. In that way he made 75 cents or one dollar a day extra. I don't do that. I just come over here once a day."

RAT SHOWED HIM THE MINE.

Gold Ore Discovered to Mr. Ingoldsby by a Rodent's Curious Habit.

The actions of a rat led N. R. Ingoldsby to the discovery of a rich gold mine in Arizona. He named the property the Rat Hole mine.

Mr. Ingoldsby had been spending several months near Mammoth, on the San Pedro river, in Arizona. His purpose was to enjoy the hunting and make a collection of the animals and minerals of the southwest. He pitched his tent in the canyon of the San Pedro, in the Santa Catarina mountains, says a Los Angeles exchange.

He had no neighbors, and was for a long time unable to account for the disappearance of small articles that he left lying about his camp. At last he noticed that when anything was taken something was left in its place. This was usually a bit of stone or wood. The culprit he found to be a rodent of the species known as the trading rat. The habits of the animal made an interesting study for Mr. Ingoldsby, and he often lay awake at night to watch for his visitor.

A silver spoon was missing one morning, and in its place was a piece of quartz carrying free gold. This still more excited Mr. Ingoldsby's curiosity, and after several attempts he succeeded in following the animal to its home. Near by was the ledge from which the gold-bearing quartz had been taken. Mr. Ingoldsby made an examination thorough enough to prove that his discovery was of considerable value.

DOORWAYS IN CHINA.

Pleasing Use Made of Many Forms That Are Strange to Western Ideas.

It is doubtful if the average reader knows certain interesting facts about the doors of the celestial kingdom—to speak literally, and not in metaphor. In China these are often round, leaf-shaped or semicircular. In placing them the builder usually avoids having one opposite another, lest evil spirits find their way from the street into the recesses of the building. The doorways separating the courts of a garden are usually of an elaborate kind, and the octagonal form is one of the most popular, says the New York Tribune.

Religious superstition asserts itself in Chinese architecture, and the universal sacredness of the numerals 3 and 9 is shown in the arrangement of temple doors. There is a triple gateway to each of the halls of the imperial palace, and the same order prevails at the Ming tombs, and the sacred person of the emperor, when he was in his Peking home, could only be approached, even by the highest officials, after three times three prostrations. The Temple of Heaven has a triple roof, a triple marble staircase, and all its mystic symbolism points either to three or its multiples.

Afraid of Balloons.

Bicycle races, comic operas and telephones are not the only bugbears of yildiz kiosk. It detests balloons, says a correspondent of a London paper. The reason is that yildiz, though well protected against an invader by land, is powerless against an aerial enemy and stands in constant dread of an Armenian or anarchist attack from the clouds. Balloons, therefore, are prohibited. The horror of the place may therefore be well imagined when a balloon was seen to rise on the other side of the Bosphorus. A host of officials were soon in pursuit of the offender until it was discovered that a schoolmaster had sent it up to instruct his pupils.

The First Elevator.

A patent was taken out on a passenger elevator 66 years ago. But the first patent for a complete and practical elevator was given to Mr. G. Otis, of Yonkers, N. Y., in January, 1861, so that, while the idea is much older the elevator is only 39 years old.

ARE "HEDGING."

Circus Rioters, Now in Jail, Long for Liberty.

"When thieves fall out," as a general thing, there are serious results—for the said thieves, says the Cass Lake Times. This statement apparently holds good in the case of the Syndicate Show rioters, who are now confined in the St. Louis county jail at Duluth, awaiting the action of the next Cass county grand jury. These men have been buoyed up with the hope that the management of the late "Syndicate" outfit, who were "smooth" individuals, would stand by them and eventually secure their release. Evidently, the management had been "stringing" them, as witness the following from Duluth, which appeared in the St. Paul Dispatch:

Duluth, Minn.—The six men who are confined in the St. Louis county jail here, charged with being concerned in the riots precipitated at Cass Lake by the Great Syndicate circus last August, which resulted in the calling out of the state militia by Gov. Lind and the rounding up of the whole gang at Cloquet, have just been informed by the management of the circus that they will be left to get out of the scrape as best they can. The men have been promised all along by the management that they would be cleared from any complicity in the affair just as soon as the close of the season would permit the bringing of witnesses here to prove that they were not concerned in the trouble.

The men have just received a letter from the management telling them that they cannot do anything for them. Their situation is unfortunate, for they must remain in jail until next May before they can secure any action by the grand jury, and then, even if cleared, they will already have served eight months' imprisonment. Today they made a statement in connection with the affair saying that they had not done so before on the advice of the show people, who promised to get them out of trouble.

They say the offense committed at Cass Lake was a grave one, but assert that they were not concerned in it in any way, and that the real culprits, Doc Baker and his gang, got wind of the affair before the train reached Cloquet, where the arrest was made, and escaped. They claim that, when the Cass Lake officers found that the real parties had escaped, they decided that someone must be taken in order to justify the calling out of the militia, and twelve men picked out and six were subsequently held. The six men here claim that they were with the Cass Lake officers at Grand Rapids the day after the trouble, when the latter had warrants for the men wanted, and the names of the men now under arrest were never mentioned in the warrants, and the officers never thought of arresting them. They claim that they are convinced that the show has been promising to secure their release to prevent them from getting at it for damages. Habeas corpus proceedings will be instituted.

The St. Louis county jail authorities have become convinced of the innocence of the men under arrest.

This is Libelous.

It is rumored that wolves are so thick up in Roseau county that they menace human life, and the other day a pack of these ferocious beasts attacked a funeral procession, and it was only after a hard fight that they were driven off.—Warren Register.

THE PROGRAM

For Tri-State Drainage Convention Outlined.

The members of the program committee for the tri-state drainage convention that will be held at Crookston next month, have been conferring together mostly by correspondence, as they are widely scattered through this state and the Dakotas, and have formulated a program that promises to be the most interesting of any yet discussed at the meetings, of which that to be held at Crookston is the third. Other than those named will be placed on the list later. Following are the speakers and subjects assigned:

Col. Davenport, assistant U. S. engineer, St. Paul—"The Survey of the Water Systems of the Red River Valley and the Water Reservoirs."

W. F. Kelso, Hallock—"Drainage of Kittson County and the Difficulties Connected With It."

Ezra G. Valentine, Wahpeton—"The Practical Results From Drainage in the Red River Valley."

Col. Scoble, Winnipeg—"The Engineering Difficulties to Be Overcome and Probable Cost."

Prof. Hoag, professor civil engineer, State University—"Maintenance of Drainage Ditches."

Prof. W. M. Hays, St. Anthony Park—"Roads and Road Building and Their Relation to Land Drainage."

Halvor Steenerson, Crookston—"The Great Floods of the Red River Valley."

Hon. Albert Berg, Warroad—"The Need of Drainage in Roseau County."

Hon. A. Grindeland, Warren—"The Red River Valley's Claim on the State Swamp Land Fund."

Dr. R. P. Kelsey, White Rock, S. D.—"Waterways as a Means of Transportation."

Hon. John D. Gibbs, Owatonna—"The Farm and What It Will Produce When Properly Drained."

A Poor Farm.

The county commissioners have decided to establish a poor farm. It seems that the drain on the county on account of the poor is excessive, and, after due deliberation, the members of the board have come to the conclusion that a poor farm would be practically self-sustaining, and would be the means of relieving the strained situation. The committee in charge of the matter has two places in view—the Francois LaBissonniere farm, directly south of Red Lake Falls, and the old Marchildon place, a little west of that place. It is the purpose to make a lease, with privilege of purchase at a set price. The board have gone into the matter thoroughly, and, when they finally act, the taxpayers whom they represent may rest assured that the county's interests have been well taken care of. The poor have cost the county, for twelve months, outside of medical attendance, some $3,500.

Church Instituted.

Gen. R. N. Adams, D. D., superintendent of missions of the Presbyterian church for the Synod of Minnesota, was in the city Sunday and instituted a Presbyterian church here. H. E. Mussey and James Wilson were elected elders and the pastor will be Rev. F. D. Stoner, who comes highly recommended. The Bradison church has been rented temporarily, but one will probably be built next summer.

THURSDAY, DEC. 20, 1900.

SENATOR O. H. MYRON, of this district, announces that he will vote for Bob Evans as Senator Davis' successor.

W. J. BRYAN has decided to start a weekly paper at Lincoln, Neb., to be known as the Commoner, which will be devoted to the discussion of political questions.

W. J. BRYAN'S daughter is something of a joker. Starting to school the other day, she made a desperate run for a street car, and finally succeeded in catching it. As she took her seat, she gasped, "Well, I'm glad one of the family can run for something and get it."

SENATOR HEITFELD, Populist, of Idaho, tells the Democrats that if they "will adhere to the principles which they stood for in the recent campaign, the Populists will continue to co-operate with them." This is a generous offer, and it should bring tears of gratitude to all Democratic eyes that are in a proper condition.

SENATOR O. H. MYRON, of Ada, one of the leading members of the state legislature from the Seventh congressional district, has publicly announced that he is going to vote for Bob Evans. It never takes Mr. Myron very long to size up the situation correctly, and this accounts, in no small degree, for his strength with the people of his district and the state at large.—Wadena Pioneer Journal.

FRATERNAL society insurance has certainly proven a good thing in many instances, and no institution or society can point with more pride to its record than the Modern Woodmen of America. Up to November 19th the total benefit fund disbursements of the Modern Woodmen, since organization, footed $18,597,990, in full payment of 9,625 death claims. Pause a moment and contemplate what a sum of happiness this means. Nearly 10,000 homes have been visited and made independent by the messengers of Modern Woodcraft. If the society died right now—which it is not in the slightest danger of doing—its history would prove that it had done more for humanity in a shorter period of time than any fraternal society that ever has existed in the world's history. Lieut. Gov. Northcott, of Illinois, is head consul of the Woodmen society.—Crookston Times.

THE Osakis Review says that, in the recently revised edition of his "History of Scandinavians in the United States," O. N. Nelson, of Minneapolis, gives some interesting facts concerning the development of the Scandinavian population in this country. For instance, it will be rather startling to most persons to know that there are in this country one-half as many Norwegians as there are in Norway. Norwegians lead all the rest of the inhabitants of the Scandinavian peninsula in this tendency to come to America, although the rest are not at all slow and some of them are crowding close upon the Norwegians themselves in the matter of numbers. For instance, there are one-third as many Swedes in the United States as there are in Sweden, and one-fifth as many Danes as there are in Denmark. Two-fifths of the total population of Minnesota are Scandinavians, and in some localities of the Northwest Scandinavians are the dominant race.

PRESIDENT HILL, of the Great Northern, in a speech before the bankers' banquet at Chicago, showed that the freight rates in the United States were lower than in any other country. He said: "We have, as a nation, gone further in mastering problems of land transportation than any other country in the world. We have some advantages over Europe in matters of railway transportation, on account of the enormous size of our country and length of our extreme hauls, but even with that a comparison of the rates paid by the public in the United States with those paid by the people of Europe is very instructive. The average rate paid in Great Britain is more than 2½ cents a ton per mile. The average on the continent, outside of Russia, is from 2 to 2.1 cents per ton per mile. Russia is about 1.8 cents. In the United States about 7 mills is the average rate, or less than one-third of the average rate charged throughout Europe, whether the roads are operated by private corporations or the respective governments. In Germany the rate is about 2 cents per ton per mile. The rates east of Chicago are, I may say, ⅓ cent a mile. West of Chicago they are from ⅔ of a cent to 9 mills. So that we have mastered the question of rail transportation, or land transportation, in a way that is far in advance of that of any of our European neighbors."

TOWN QUICKLY REBUILT.

It Was Destroyed by Fire Last June and Already Is Replaced.

The village of Virginia, near Duluth, Minn., was destroyed by fire June 9 this year. All the business portion was swept away and 300 buildings were burned. Since that time the village has been twice rebuilt, and it has now a business section of solid brick, extending for half a mile along the main street. Immediately after the fire upon every lot that had contained a building there sprang up a mushroom growth of wooden temporary structures. Families lived in box cars along the railroad track, single cars accommodating an entire family with all its furniture, from a sewing machine to a piano. The depot was in a box car, and cloth inclosures served as both dwellings and places of business, says the Boston Transcript.

As soon as the men and material could be secured the wooden huts were torn down and permanent brick buildings began to take their place. Now, four months after the fire, there are over 3,000 feet of solid brick buildings of two and three stories completed or nearly so. There is not a wooden building on the main street. A handsome theater, called, of course, "opera house," capable of seating 700 persons, has been completed; a club for the social wants of mining engineers, business men and their visitors has been organized and a house for it erected. The best hotel north of Duluth is under way, and the village is putting in all the newest conveniences of civilization. An iron mine has been discovered under the town and is being opened. The Virginia of to-day is very different from that of four months ago. It is an excellent example of western hustle.

LOOT FROM TIENTSIN.

American Army Secures Rich Treasure from Salt Commissioner's Yamen and Sends It Home.

The report of Brig. Gen. Heywood, commanding the United States marine corps, has been made public by the navy department. Its most interesting features are those covering the operations of the United States marines in China, including the heroic defense of the legations at Peking and the march of the marines on Tientsin, which have been fully described heretofore.

Gen. Heywood submits the following account of the taking of a considerable amount of bullion in the siege of Peking.

"In a communication dated July 18, 1900, Col. Meade refers to the looting which had been going on in Tientsin. He stated that the treasury has been ransacked, but that all the vaults were not looted and Maj. Waller with a force is searching for the treasure. The treasure, which consisted principally of silver bullion, fused with brick, mortar and other debris, was recovered from the ruins of the salt commissioner's yamen, which had been looted and burned before the marines arrived on the spot. A board, consisting of Maj. Waller and Assistant Paymaster George Richards, Capt. M. J. Shaw and C. H. C. Moller (an American agent in Tientsin of J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York), was appointed to count the bullion and appraise its value. The bullion was counted by this board, which estimated its value at $376,300, United States currency. It had been the intention to deposit the treasure for safe keeping with the Hong-Kong and Shanghai bank, but the vaults of this bank would not accommodate it, and it was therefore removed to the premises of this bank, under the supervision of the officers of the First regiment of marines and placed under guard there."

Gen. Heywood says that the bullion was exchanged for three New York drafts, which have been forwarded by Paymaster Bryan, of the navy, to the secretary of the navy.

FOR BETTER MARKSMEN.

Important Action for Improvement of Gunnery Practice Taken by Navy Department.

Important action for the improvement of gunnery practice has been taken by the navy department upon the recommendation of Rear Admiral Crowningshield, chief of the bureau of navigation, says a New York Herald special from Washington. The department has issued a general order extending the course in gunnery instruction to each squadron of the navy.

The new order establishes an "inspector of target practice," who shall be present at the "fighting of efficiency practice" provided and submit a comprehensive report thereon. It also constitutes a board of officers, to be known as the board of gunnery instructors, who will select, subject to the approval of the commanding officers, members of gun crews to take gunnery instruction courses.

Preliminary instruction will be given; then final practice with small arms. The sub-calibre practice will be held, and then the preliminary target practice. From the men making the best records at all the target practice, ships gun pointers will be selected, and those having the highest percentage will be detailed at the earliest opportunity for the advanced course, provided for on board a gunnery training ship.

A BIG YEAR'S WORK.

Thomas J. Sullivan, acting director of the bureau of engraving and printing, has submitted to Secretary Gage the annual report of the operations of the bureau for the fiscal year ended June 30. A summary of the work done during the year shows a total of 116,909,423 sheets as follows: Notes, certificates of deposits, bonds and national bank notes, 26,032,718; internal revenue stamps, 48,784,045; customs stamps, 225,000; postage stamps, 40,042,547; postage stamps for Cuba, 162,300; postage stamps for Porto Rico, 16,550; postage stamps for the Philippines, 52,010; postage stamps for Guam, 1,570; checks, certificates, drafts, etc., 1,592,683.

The number of sheets printed does not really give a fair conception of the amount of work done. There were, for instance, 40,042,547 sheets of postage stamps, but the number of stamps in the sheets was 4,026,452,374. The number of internal revenue stamps was 2,439,747,312.

It is estimated that for the fiscal year 1900 the bureau will have to print 142,357,100 sheets of various classes of work.

Among the topics which called forth considerable discussion at the international prison congress held recently at Brussels was that of securing from an offender reparation for the injured party. Various suggestions were made, such as the appropriation of fines, of the earnings of prisoners or of compelling some kind of guarantee of reparation on the liberation of prisoners. There was some discussion of manual labor, and especially instruction in "sloyd," advocated particularly by Mr. Haymann, of New Orleans. Some English delegates dwelt upon the general value of agricultural training and open-air labor.

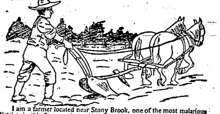
Palaces on Wheels.

The Burlington's new Minneapolis and St. Paul-Chicago and St. Louis train consists of a buffet library car, a combination sleeping car, a standard sleeping car, a compartment sleeping car, a dining car, a reclining chair car and a day coach (high back seats.)



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. Charles Landa, a farmer living four miles north of Wylie, left home July 17th last and started on a trip he had planned to take to Nebraska to look up land. From that day to this he has not been heard from, and is as completely lost as if he had fallen into a hole in the ground a mile deep, and the opening had closed over him. He had $75 when he left home, and it is that he has been foully dealt with. His wife and fourteen children still reside in this county.

Indian officers, headed by Capt. Mercer, have just finished payment of the great Chippewa reservation Indians at Cass Lake, Red Lake and the upper Mississippi, and a payment of $5 was made to every Chippewa individual on the reservation. Since then the village of Cass Lake and other towns on the Duluth line have been livelier than at any time in their history, and the $5 has been quickly dissipated, as that is about the price of enough "Indian whiskey" to paralyze the average buck.

A young lady in East Grand Forks stepped into a butcher shop the other evening at 9 o'clock, for the purpose of procuring material for breakfast. She experienced some difficulty in opening the door, but it closed with a snap. She found neither the proprietor nor any of his assistants present, and concluded they had stepped out. After waiting half an hour, she decided to go without meat for breakfast, but, to her dismay, she was unable to open the door. She managed to attract the attention of a passerby after a time and explain the situation to him, and he hurried after the proprietor, who was aroused from his bed to release the young lady from the shop. The lock was a spring one, and had caught when the shop was closed for the night. The young lady's friends are enjoying a quiet laugh at her expense.

THERE IS DOUBT

About the Legality of the Recent Bond Issue.

The city is having trouble in its endeavor to dispose of the $4,500 worth of bonds, which the citizens recently voted to issue. The reason for this is that the institutions usually buying these goods do not consider them general obligations against the city, but only as a lien against the electric light plant. While all money lenders are willing to buy general bonds of the city, they do not care to purchase special bonds on electric light plants. It is also understood that the cost of the plant has exceeded the estimates, and, if the proposition is voted upon, it will be for the purpose of issuing bonds to the amount of $7,600, the cost of the plant. There can be no doubt but that the proposition will carry, as nearly 90 per cent of the vote cast last fall was in favor of bonds, and the only thing to be regretted is that it will put the city to the expense of holding another election.

The council will consider the matter at a meeting to be held this evening.

Death of James Powers.

The Cass Lake Times contains the following account of the death of James Powers:

"James Powers, a well-known and respected resident of Cass Lake, died at his home in this city last Monday forenoon, at about 11 o'clock. The news of Mr. Powers' death was soon spread over town, and his sudden demise caused a considerable shock among our citizens. Mr. Powers was taken sick with an attack of typhoid fever, about ten days ago, and, while it was known that he was very ill, not many were of the opinion that he was dangerously so. On Sunday last, he was seized with vomiting, which continued, more or less, till his death. Perforation of the bowels was the immediate cause of death. Mr. Powers was a member of the local camp of Modern Woodmen, in which organization he held an insurance policy for $1,000, and the members of the camp were in attendance during his illness. The remains were embalmed by Undertaker Will L. Dunlap, and, accompanied by Thos. Powers, a brother of the deceased, were shipped to Birch Coulie, where they will be interred in the cemetery, where lie the remains of the parents of Mr. Powers. Mrs. Powers was unable to accompany the body of her husband to its last resting place, she being too ill: The Modern Woodmen appointed a guard of honor, who escorted the remains to the depot.

"James Powers was born in Canada, on Jan. 16, 1862. He, with his family, came to Cass Lake two years ago, and has resided here ever since. He was industrious and honest, and, by his exemplary conduct, had made many friends in Cass Lake. The death of Mr. Powers removes from the community a respected citizen and deprives his wife of a kind and provident husband, and his children of a loving father."

SEVER PAYS UP.

The Bank Received a Remittance from Sever Simle.

The First State Bank Tuesday received a remittance from an old customer, Sever Simle, in the shape of a draft for $1,172.12, and the officials of that institution are correspondingly happy.

It will be remembered that Simle went away unexpectedly about a year ago, after securing all of the money he could in various ways. He borrowed $1,000 from the bank, giving as security a chattel mortgage on the harness shop of Simle & Locken, and departed for Norway, where he now resides. The bank bought the claims of several wholesale houses against the firm, and sold the stock of goods. Payment on a draft for $1,000, given by a Grand Forks bank, was also stopped at the time, and the local money lending institution succeeded in coming out even on the deal, the draft received Tuesday representing the profits of the transaction. It was secured by efficient attorneys in Norway employed by the bank.

Simle was doing a good paying business here, and, had he continued, would have succeeded in doing well. In endeavoring to defraud others, he has lost most of his money.

May Extend.

A report given out by one of the promoters of the Richards-Halvorson logging railway, now in operation from Nebish to Red Lake, Beltrami county, is to the effect that it is the intention to extend the line from Nebish south and east to connect with the Minnesota & International at Tenstrike. A. A. White and the other townsite boomers are interested in the latter place, and it will undoubtedly make a thrifty little business if the road is extended. Such an extension would tap a country rich in pine and other valuable timber, as well as one well adapted to agriculture.

AS TO CREMATION.

Science Approves It and Religion Does Not Oppose, Says This Authority.

The custom of cremation was Roman, but it disappeared with the Christian era under the influence of the belief in the literal resurrection of the body. Its revival in all countries is coincident with a broader interpretation of the teachings of Christianity and with the development of modern science. The doctrine of the conversation of matter, that the only change possible is transformation and not destruction, bears powerfully in favor of cremation. The transformation of the grave is relatively slow, that of the crematory relatively rapid, but both processes are the same, and, in comparison with the duration of the world, both are intolerably swift. We are cut down and we wither. Whether the decay is a matter of hours or years is merely an incident of the inevitable, says the Brooklyn Eagle.

Those considerations can be felt best in a time of scientific domination over the intellectual life. The hygienic and sanitary reasons are most potent in an era of the rapid growth of large cities. Therefore, it is not surprising to know that the revival of cremation begun about 1880, has grown rapidly not only in this country but in Europe. Here we have 22 crematories. France has 25. Italy and England have fewer. The appeal of science is for the new practice. Religion is not hostile to it, as is shown by its adoption by an active and devout member of a great church. But sentiment association and the whole mortuary poetry of the whole world are opposed to it. Those are forces which are modified slowly. They cannot be overcome by shock, and the attempt would be brutal as well as useless. But the growth of cremation is accompanying, if not keeping pace with, the growth of cities. In the next quarter of a century the custom will have become general enough to aid in the solution of the present serious problem of finding suitable resting places for the dead.

LITERARY TREASURE TROVE.

Fortunate Find of an English Book Lover at Auction Sale in Leeds.

One of those romantic discoveries of literary treasure trove which one often hears of but somehow has never the good luck to experience has recently befallen a Leeds man, Harold P. Donn. Some five years ago Mr. Donn was at an auction sale in Briggate, Leeds, when he picked up a battered old volume on Hebrew customs for half a crown. He has recently became aware that the book is of considerable value, and on submitting it to a Leeds gentleman whose opinion on such matters is of some weight he was informed that the value of his purchase might be estimated at between £300 and £500.

The book does not look worth the money. It can boast only one cover, and the first few pages have disappeared, says the Jewish World. It is really three books bound into one volume—a book on Roman antiquities; "Seven Books of the Attick Antiquities," and the work on Hebrew ceremonies, which constituted the valuable portion. This is entitled "Moses and Aaron. Civil and Ecclesiastical Rites Used by the Ancient Hebrews; Observed at Much Pain for the Clearing of Many Obscure Texts Throughout the Holy Scripture." There is some more title, but this is sufficient for a sample. The book is by one Thomas Godwyn, B. D., whose preface is dated 1624, while the date of issue of this edition, the eleventh, is 1678. It constitutes a complete compendium of Hebrew customs, and is compiled largely from authorities whose works are now lost.

Electricity and Modern Navies.

One of the improvements in the new battleship Kentucky is the increased use of electricity instead of steam, says a writer in Munsey's Magazine. The Kentucky is planned on the principle of a trolley line so far as her subsidiary engines are concerned. There is a motor which performs each particular work, and instead of a broiling steam-pipe running to it an electric wire connects it with the central engines. The steam is kept where it belongs—in the boiler room. This is a great economy of space, and the discomfort it saves the officers and crew is not easily measured.

British Naturalization.

To be naturalized in Great Britain an alien must have lived there for at least five years or have served the crown faithfully for the same period; and he must continue to reside in the British jurisdiction, unless he continues in the government service in foreign countries. A naturalized citizen has all the "political and other rights, powers and privileges," and is subject to all the obligations to which a natural-born Briton is entitled or subject.

Phonographic Reminder.

An ingenious American inventor has just patented a speaking clock which he claims will be of the greatest value to persons of forgetful and irregular habits. It consists of a clock phonograph combination. In place of the usual striking attachment is a phonograph, which can be set to speak a sentence at any time desired, thus becoming an unfailing reminder to its owner of the duties of each successive hour.

Hindus Found Bacilli.

Ages ago the Hindu "medicine man" knew all about disease germs and microbes, although he was jeered at by western scientists because he called them "little worms." And, after all, when we moderns "discovered" what he had known all along, we could find no better name for the new organisms than bacilli—which, being interpreted, is "little sticks."

OUR COAL PRODUCTION.

America Has Mining Advantages Not Possessed by Great Britain.

After the lapse of a century of active mining, hundreds of millions of tons of coal have been extracted from the limited areas of Great Britain, and it has come to such a pass that the high prices hitharto prevailing are absolutely required to meet the expenses of production and transportation, for now it is necessary to go deeper into the ground for the coal. Thinner seams have been worked, the more attractive deposits having been exhausted. All the entries now are long, comparatively few new mines having been opened in Great Britain in the last ten years, says a writer in the Engineering Magazine.

A moment's thought will make it plain that underground haulage and hoisting are enormously expensive methods of transportation, and that a certainty that the factors will increase in importance every day, as the coal industry grows older, makes it plain that the United States coal fields, almost untouched as many of them are, grow steadily in advantage as regards the supply of the world. Generally speaking, there is not a coal mine in the seaboard bituminous regions from which coal has to be hoisted. It can in every case be drawn out in cars, sometimes up a grade, it is true, but quite as often the cars run down grade. Then, too, the American mines are generally new. All devices are contrived with the view of handling a large tonnage as economically as possible, and the present shipper of bituminous coal is not hampered by arrangements made years ago when trade requirements were less important. Very notable, too, have been the arrangements for the transportation of coal.

CUT BY A PRESIDENT.

A Scar of Which an Old Pennsylvania Lady Is Extremely Proud.

There was an old lady among the group of visitors at the white house the other morning and she was extremely frank in her reminiscences. It was obviously her first visit to the place, and she eyed everything with the greatest interest, relates the Washington Post.

"I've always been wanting to see this place ever since Jim Buchanan came here to live," she said to the tall, blue-eyed young man who was with her. "'Old Jim,' we used to call him in Huntington county, Pa. I lived just half a mile from his father's butcher shop when I was a little girl, and many and many's the time I've bought meat from 'Old Jim.' Do you see that scar?"

"Well, James Buchanan gave me that. I went into the shop one day to get a steak, and just as he was bringing the cleaver down I poked my finger right in the way of it. He tied it up for me and I cried all the way home. I guess I wouldn't have shed so many tears if I had known I'd been chopped by a future president. But we didn't think 'Old Jim' would amount to much in those days. We didn't think he'd ever do more than sell meat in his father's shop. But you can't tell what a man's going to be by the way he starts out. And I guess"—and here the old lady's eyes gleamed with pride—"I guess there aren't many people who can show a scar that a president of the United States gave them."

BIGGEST OF WATERSPOUTS.

Enormous Column That Was Seen by Vessel's Crew in Gulf of Mexico.

A column of water 60 or 70 feet in height that covered an area nearly 100 feet square was a sight that Capt. Liddle and the crew of the steamship King Bleddyn, which arrived from Mexico, off Campeche bank, saw on the morning of September 16.

Capt. Liddle, in describing the unusual spectacle to a New York Times reporter, said:

"It was about 6:30 in the morning of the 16th, when we were in latitude 23.14 and longitude 87.07, while off the northeast end of Campeche bank, in the Gulf of Mexico, that we observed a column of water whirling in the air at a height of apparently 60 or 70 feet and covering an area that appeared to be about 100 feet square.

"The column, which looked like a mass of steam, made a beautiful sight as it shot into the air. All around it the water was foaming and frothing like breakers in a shoal. As to what it was, I don't know; it looked like a volcanic eruption, though I never heard of any volcanoes in that region. It may have been due to an upheaval caused by an earthquake."

Capt. Liddle said that the spectacle was visible for half an hour, and that as the King Bleddyn gradually sailed out of sight of it the water calmed down and then suddenly rose again, shooting a steaming column high into the air.

How Nature Warns.

Seaweed as a test for sewage—this is the discovery made by Dr. Letts, professor of chemistry in the Belfast college, and his coadjutor, Mr. Hawthorne, of the same college, says a London newspaper. Their attention had been called to large quantities of putrifying seaweed outside Belfast and Dublin. Investigation proved that the growth of the weed depended largely on the sewage pollution of the water, and that, in fact, it only flourished in localities where such pollution existed. The results of Prof. Letts' experiments were recently communicated to the chemical section of the British association.

FOR A PACIFIC CABLE.

Lieut. Hood Urges Government Ownership and Control.

Declares That Such Advantages Are an Absolute Necessity in Handling Our Armies and Navy in Time of International Conflict.

An earnest plea for a government cable across the Pacific ocean is made by Lieut. John Hood, of the navy, who performed notable work in the survey, which definitely established a satisfactory route, in an article published in the current number of the proceedings of the naval institute.

"If we wish to secure ourselves against all eventualities, and be fully equipped to take our part successfully in the struggle of races that the inevitable laws of evolution force us to enter, let us," says Lieut. Hood, "not only fortify our ports, build fleets and equip armies, but let us by all means prepare the way to render these fleets and armies efficient and capable of their utmost usefulness, by supplying them with the safe, sure and prompt information so necessary to any successful undertaking. The only way to attain this end with certainty and success is for the government to lay and operate its own cables, and to construct, equip and man its own cable ships; and the beginning of this great work cannot be made too soon."

Lieut. Hood calls attention to the fact that surety and secrecy can only be attained by a cable, owned, controlled and worked by the government itself, by its own agents.

"Admiral Cervera's book," he says, "shows how utterly impossible it is in time of war to preserve secrecy with private cables. In spite of all the efforts of this government to isolate Cuba and suppress all dispatches regarding the movements of our ships, we are astonished to find how minutely Gen. Blanco and Admiral Cervera were informed of the movements of our ships and squadrons, even on our own coasts.

"From a military point of view the question of the nationality of the operators is most important. No foreigner or alien of any description should be allowed to have any connection with the line in any capacity whatever. Its direction and operation should be American, pure and simple, or betrayal of trust will surely follow.

"One other great military advantage of a national over a private cable is the possession by the government of properly equipped and manned cable ships. In the conflicts of the future the cable and cable ship are destined to play a part hardly secondary to that of the army and navy. It may be taken as an axiom in future wars between nations with outlying possessions that a cable war will go on side by side with the military operations, and that nation which has failed to provide itself with cables and cable laying and cutting appliances will be worsted."

SUES DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

Stepmother Seeks to Recover Money Spent on the Improvement of Blenheim Palace.

Lady William Beresford (formerly Lilian Duchess of Marlborough), has brought action against the young duke of Marlborough to recover the money which she spent in improving Blenheim castle during the lifetime of the last duke. The matter came up originally when the present duke succeeded to the title, but owing to the friendly relations existing between the duke and his stepmother it was temporarily arranged. Since the duke's marriage to Consuelo Vanderbilt, it is reported, an estrangement has grown up between Lady Beresford and her stepson. On more than one occasion, it is said, the young American duchess snubbed her countrywoman (Lady Beresford was formerly Mrs. Louis Hammersley, of New York), until the latter determined she could not submit to such treatment any longer, and she now asks the law to compel her stepson to return the amounts she spent on Blenheim.

PROVOKES SOCIETY TALK.

Countess Has Wardrobe of White Gowns, Helps Young Girls and Prefers Eton Boys.

There is much gossip in society over the countess of Warwick's latest fad. She has an extensive wardrobe of entirely white. On the street she is clad in white broadcloth tailor suits. In the evening she is clad in filmy gowns of the same color. No matter what the weather the countess is always in white. During the past year she has been devoting much time to women's cooperative work, helping young girls in every possible way.

Now that she has come to London for the social season, she prefers the society of young boys, and is often seen out with youngsters in Eton jackets or in their first long coats. She says they please her more than the society men, and wears white to please the boys, who appear young with them.

THE NATION'S WAR VETERANS

The Generous Way in Which Uncle Sam's Defenders Have Been Cared For by Him.

"Since July, 1896, to the present time," said Commissioner Evans, of the pension bureau, "Uncle Sam has disbursed on account of pensions $2,500,000,000, and high-water mark has not yet been reached. There are not quite a million pensioners on the rolls, but we are not far from that number, and by the time 40 years have elapsed, since the rebellion closed in 1865, we will undoubtedly have a million pensioners on the rolls. We are paying more for pensions to-day than France pays for the support of its standing army, and almost as much as Russia pays for all arms of its military service."

HIS BUBBLE PRICKED

Michigan Youth Not Provided For by Miss Helen Gould.

Goes to New York Expecting to Be Cared For by the Rich Philanthropist and Returns Home a Sadder and a Wiser Boy.

Miss Helen Gould denies a story told by William Jackson, of Phoenix, Mich. that she invited him to come to New York city under her patronage. In fact, Miss Gould has a very misty recollection of the event which the boy describes in highly colored words.

"Miss Gould has heard of this story," said the caretaker at Miss Gould's Irvington house. "She left word that if anyone called and asked about this young man Jackson to say that she remembered a boy in Michigan who held her horses and refused to accept a tip. She, however, says it is not true that she invited the boy to come east, nor did she promise to educate him or do anything else for him."

Jackson has returned to his home at Phoenix, Mich., a sadder but a wiser boy than when he left there a few weeks ago. Jackson told Mrs. George Robert Sullivan that upon his arrival in New York city he went at once to Miss Gould's residence. Instead of being received as he had expected, he was met by a butler, who turned him from the door before he could get word to Miss Gould. Jackson, sick at heart and discouraged, was directed to the Soldiers' Relief association, where he told his tale of woe to Mrs. Sullivan. To her he said Miss Gould told him if he ever came east to call upon her and she would give him a start in life. Jackson said he had induced his father to give him $60, with which he had come to New York city.

Mrs. Sullivan placed the young man in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian association until a few days ago, when she got transportation for him to his home and sent him back. He probably will don overalls again and stick to farming.

LONG TRIP WITH AUTOMOBILE.

Charles N. Wheeler Rides from New York City to Peoria, Illinois.

Charles N. Wheeler, formerly of Peoria, Ill., returned from New York the other evening by way of his automobile. On account of the severe illness of his wife Mr. Wheeler abandoned the automobile at El Paso, coming to Peoria by train.

He left New York city three weeks ago and put in seven to eight hours a day in travel, making from 30 to 40 miles a day on poor roads, and from 73 to 85 miles a day when the roads were good. He reports the roads of New York, Ohio and Indiana to be first-class turnpikes, but the Illinois roads the poorest of dirt thoroughfares.

Mr. Wheeler's trip was uneventful. The weather was remarkably good, but two rainy days being experienced. Riding over the country in an automobile is better than an observation car, and Mr. Wheeler is one of the first Peorians to make such a trip.

PLAN NEW WHITE HOUSE.

Congress to Be Asked for $2,000,000 for the Making of Extensive Improvements.

Congress this winter will be called upon for a big appropriation with which to enlarge the white house. The commission which has charge of the plans for improving the historic mansion has nearly completed its work. It is believed that about $2,000,000 will be asked for. The plan that has been agreed upon is substantially the same as was drawn at the suggestion of Mrs. Harrison when she was mistress of the white house. It contemplates a long, colonaded addition at the east and another at the west end of the present building. The structural work would be steel and marble. The east wing will be devoted to the executive force and contain provision for formal functions. The west wing will contain a magnificent state dining-room capable of seating 100 guests.

QUEEN'S WEDDING GOWN.

Embroidering Will Be Done by Girls at School of Needlework at Amsterdam.

The queen's trousseau is ordered to be ready for the ceremony on January 17. The wedding dress will be embroidered at the school of art needlework at Amsterdam, where the coronation gown was made. The best public school will work on the dress. The material will be stretched on a frame. Half the girls will stand over it and push in the needles, while the other half, reclining on a mattress below, will pull the needles through and work them upwards again. The head of the school has designed the embroidery for the dress, and the work will be executed under her personal direction.

Cumbrous Money.

The largest and most cumbersome form of money is found in Central Africa, where natives use a cross-shaped ingot of copper ore over ten inches long. It is heavy enough to be a formidable weapon.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

THURSDAY, DEC. 27, 1900.

Hon. A. N. Dare, in his paper, the Elk River Star News, very truly says:

"The Evans and Clapp adherents in the senatorial contest had better both drop the locality argument. It is good enough for use in getting their home-delegation in line, but a bitter Ramsey-Hennepin squabble would injure the chances of both candidates. We want a man in the United States senate big enough to represent the whole state, and, if he cannot be found in Hennepin or Ramsey counties, there are several men outside who could fill the bill. The state will not stand for any monkey work between Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The "Twentieth Century" Presbyterian church preaching services will be held at 11 a. m. and 7:45 p. m; Sabbath school at 12, and Y. P. S. C. E. at 7 p. m. F. D. Stone, pastor.

TO CONDUCT A DAIRY FARM.

Former Well-Known Newspaper Woman Buys Herd of Jerseys.

Mrs. Antoinette Van Hoesen Wakeman, formerly a well-known newspaper woman in Chicago, has put a herd of grade Jersey and Jersey-Holstein cows on her farm, near Hastings, Minn., and made the first shipment of milk to the Crescent Creamery company, of St. Paul.

Mrs. Wakeman believes that Hastings is admirably situated to become a point for the shipping of milk to the Twin Cities. She proposes to devote her place, which is less than a mile from the courthouse, exclusively to dairy products and fruit, and has built a barn, and proposes to have her herd and milk cared for on the lines indicated by Prof. T. L. Haecker, of the agricultural experiment station of the state university. Mrs. Wakeman has arranged to ship from 27 to 30 gallons of milk daily.

Although this is a somewhat unusual innovation for a woman in this part of the country, "personally conducted" farms are a profitable fad of eastern women. Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder, whose husband is the editor of the Century, has a farm of 250 acres, where she lives nine months out of every year, and makes most profitable. Abram Hewitt's daughters are also enthusiastic and successful scientific farmers, and many other well-known women are devoting themselves to similar agricultural undertakings.

SPIRITED COMPETITION.

New Firms Seek to Secure Contracts for the Building of Warships.

The monopoly of constructing warships of the largest type, hitherto enjoyed by three concerns in this country, promises to be invaded by four or five firms, which have expressed a great desire to make proposals for the construction of the vessels, bids for which will be opened on December 6. The three firms which have always bid upon this work are the Union Iron works, of San Francisco; the Cramp Building and Dry Dock company, of Philadelphia, and the Newport News (Va.) Shipbuilding company. It now appears that these firms will have as rivals the Fore River Shipbuilding company, of Weymouth, Mass.; Townsend & Downey, of New York; the New York Shipbuilding company, of New York city; the Trigg Engine and Shipbuilding company, of Richmond, Va., and the Risdon Iron works, of San Francisco. The appearance of the latter firm in the list of competitors is something of a surprise. It will make it interesting for the Union Iron works, which has had no competitors in the race for naval contracts covering large ships on the Pacific coast.

Lightning Rod Miles in Length.

Bavaria has a most curious claim to notoriety, which is that it possesses the longest lightning conductor in the world. It rises some yards above the top of the meteorological station on the Zugspitze, the highest point in the German empire, and runs down the side of the mountain to the bottom of Hollenthal, where there is running water all the year round. The length of the rod is five and one-half kilometers—nearly three and a half miles.

Too Large a Bite.

Manchuria being about 800 miles one way and 500 the other, it is no wonder the Russian bear denies having swallowed it at the first gulp. At least two bites at a cherry of that magnitude are to be looked for, says the New York Tribune, and perhaps several more. But there is little doubt that the robust animal will worry it all down sooner or later.

HYPNOTISTS IN JAIL.

Numerous Crimes in Paris Charged to Two "Svengalis."

Said to Have Compelled Servant Girls by Hypnotic Suggestion to Steal for Them—Experimental Tests Made.

A curious case will shortly come before the Paris courts. Two men, each endowed with peculiarly powerful hypnotic influence, are charged with a number of offenses, principally thefts and crimes against morals. Some women who find themselves implicated will testify that the criminals took advantage of their disposition to fall under the influence of mesmeric suggestion.

The authorities may conduct the hearing partly behind closed doors. Nevertheless quite a series of strange misdeeds will be ventilated publicly. Thus, four servant girls arrested at various times for thefts are now believed to have acted irresponsibly, having carried the property out to the men in the dead of night, according to orders given while the servants were in a hypnotic state, and which they obeyed irresistibly at the appointed hour several days afterward.

It is rumored that these four servants were taken from the penitentiary and placed in the hands of mental specialists, who conducted conclusive experiments showing that all four could be made irresponsibly criminal.

The details of these experiments were refused, but it is learned that to one girl, aged 22, it was suggested that she stab herself when 24 hours had elapsed. Then she was awakened. At the appointed time she suddenly dropped her occupation, seized a knife placed purposely near, and stabbed herself vigorously in the direction of her heart.

Had not the weapon been a perfect working stage knife, the blade running into the handle, the maid would certainly have committed self-murder in obedience to another person's will.

ADOPTS LIFE-SAVING NET.

Fire Chief Croker Makes Tests of New Fire Department Apparatus.

Fire Chief Croker announced the other day that the new life-saving net which the department had been experimenting with for two months at fire headquarters had been adopted. He also said that it was the best thing of the kind ever invented, and that it had stood all sorts of tests satisfactorily. A fireman jumped into the net from a fourth-story window the other day, and the shock of the impact was trifling while the men who were holding the net felt practically no strain when their companion landed in it.

The net consists of a circular gas pipe frame, which shuts up like that of an old-fashioned purse, and which, when open, has a diameter of 15 feet. Attached to the frame is the canvas net, and the canvas is lined with a layer of wadding two inches thick. To reduce to the minimum the shock to a person striking the net, and to lessen the difficulty of the men holding it up by the frame, the canvas is attached to the frame by strong metal springs, which take up the force of the impact.

The first net for actual use will be added to the equipment of hook and ladder company No. 16 in East Sixty-seventh street. Eventually every fire truck in the city will be supplied with one.

FAMOUS MANSION FOR SALE.

Former Home of Dr. Evans on the Market—Offer of $1,000,000 Is Not Accepted.

The historical Evans mansion in Paris is for sale. There is a standing offer of $1,000,000 for it, which the owner, who is in Philadelphia, so far has not accepted. The company offering that sum intends to demolish the building and erect in its stead several modern mansions. The grounds are rather extensive and are situated in the most favorable part of the Avenue Bois de Boulogne. The government rented the mansion for $10,000 to royal visitors to the exposition. Only two, however, lived there. The king of Sweden, with others, preferred the freer way of living at a hotel, going about town incognito, as King Leopold and King George also did.

NEEDS WIFE WITH MONEY.

A St. Louis Man's Novel Plan to Obtain a Medical Education.

Orville L. Hubar makes a novel proposition through the advertising columns of the St. Louis papers. He is anxious to obtain a wife who has money enough to enable him to complete his medical education. He thinks $1,500 would about do the trick. Although unusual, he does not consider his proposition anything more than an ordinary business one and believes that love could come later. He studied medicine in New York, but was compelled to quit on account of the failure of his father, who was at one time a wealthy Texas ranchman. He believes by getting his education he could make a mark in the world. He is 28 years old.

Strength of Canada's Militia.

The Canadian militia consists of about 40,000 men, and, although legislative power exists to enable the government to keep up its strength by ballot if occasion should arise, and to call upon the entire male population between 18 and 60 years to serve under arms in case of an emergency, service has been cheerfully offered and no difficulty experienced in keeping up the proper strength of the force.

VERY OLD TABLETS.

New Light on the Earliest History of the World.

Remarkable Discoveries of Dr. Hilprecht at Nippur—Evidences of Civilization Earlier Than Supposed Time of Adam and Eve.

Prof. H. V. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania, who has been exploring the mountains of ancient Nippur, in Asia Minor, arrived in New York the other morning on the steamer Friedrich der Grosse from Bremen. Prof. Hilprecht brought with him some of the tablets marked with cuneiform inscriptions, which he recently discovered in an old temple on the ruins of Nippur. These tablets contain records of civilization which existed as long ago as 5000 B. C. —that is, as long before Abraham as Abraham was before our time.

Prof. Hilprecht's coming has been awaited anxiously by students interested in the remote past, because his discoveries are believed to have reorganized the chronology of Biblical times, extending it back many millenniums prior to the old time reckoning of the deluge. Therefore he is looked upon as a messenger bearing news of the earliest records of civilization.

Dr. Hilprecht has been exploring the mounds of ancient Nippur for 11 years. His campaigns have heretofore been most successful, but during the past year he has made the greatest discoveries of all, the finding of the library of the ancient Temple of Nippur and the remains of a huge palace having at least two stories and containing many evidences of what might be called modern conveniences.

The library tablets throw a strong light on how people lived at Nippur at the time when Adam and Eve were supposed to be living in the Garden of Eden. Some of the tablets are dictionaries, architectural plans, building lists, grammatical exercises, contracts, bills of sale, histories and chronological lists, and not only do they form a complete record of the time, but they indicate that the civilization then existing was many thousands of years old. They supply many gaps which are known to exist in Genesis; they turn light on the origin of the Jews and the Jewish religion, and they are wonderfully corroborative of the facts outlined in the Old Testament.

"The chief point to be remarked," said the professor the other morning, "is that we have found the first Babylonian temple library that was ever discovered. Hitherto we have possessed nothing more than knowledge of the probable contents of such a library, from copies found in the royal library of Ashurbanipal, in Nineveh, which was discovered 60 years ago."

PLAN YALE BI-CENTENNIAL.

College Will Hold Elaborate Celebration November 20 to 23.

President Hadley and the members of the Yale faculty announced the other night that the plans for the bicentennial celebration of Yale on November 20, 21, 22 and 23 were about completed and that Yale is to have a celebration in which the graduates and undergraduates will take prominent parts.

The most important announcement in connection with the celebration is that by the finance committee. This committee has been occupied with collecting funds primarily for the purpose of erecting the new memorial buildings on Grove and College streets. The total amount of subscriptions up to October 26, 1900, is $603,474.79. Of this amount $244,069.84 has been paid for land on which to erect the buildings, while $99,110 is assigned by the donors to special purposes.

A total of $282,404.10 has been paid out for site, plans and construction to date. Three additional subscriptions of $100,000 each have been made on condition that three other subscriptions of similar amount are secured.

One of the gentlemen making this conditional promise has made one-half of his gift outright, so that the total amount definitely in sight at present may be increased by $50,000, that is raised to $653,474.79.

The number of subscribers to the bicentennial fund is 607.

ONE HORSE RESCUES ANOTHER

Plunges in and Tows to Land Blind Animal Struggling in Water.

A blind horse was rescued from a watery grave the other day by another horse. The blind horse wandered into a mill pond at Mountain Grove, W. Va., and soon got beyond his depth, when he began swimming around in a circle, unable to land. His distress attracted a horse which belongs to Postmaster C. Z. Herner to the water's edge, and he tried by neighing to direct the blind horse to shore. Failing in this, he plunged into the water and swam out into the deep pool to the distressed animal's relief, which was accomplished in the unique way of seizing its foretop and towing the quadruped safely to terra firma, amid the cheers of upward of 100 persons who had become spectators.

She Has Nine Lives.

The announcement of the illness of the empress of China need occasion her friends no alarm, says the Pittsburgh Times, since a woman who has been so often assassinated, poisoned and burned will easily be able to pull through an ordinary illness.

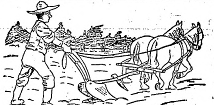
The Burlington's new Minneapolis and St. Paul-Chicago and St. Louis train consists of a buffet library car, a combination sleeping car, a standard sleeping car, a compartment sleeping car, a dining car, a reclining chair car and a day coach (high back seats.)



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. TO PREVENT FIRES

Two Dozen Mounted Men Will Patrol Reservation Lands.

Secretary Hitchcock has recommended to congress that $5,400 be appropriated for the prevention of fires on the Chippewa reservation in Minnesota. It is proposed that 24 mounted men shall be detailed for the work, and their compensation is fixed at $75 per month. This is the result of Fire Warden Andrews' representations before the department.

'RAH FOR EDDY!

He Is Making an Effort to Open the Reservation.

The following telegram, taken from the St. Paul Pioneer Press, will be good news to the citizens of Thief River Falls:

"Efforts will soon be made to induce the government to purchase the Indian lands in the northern part of Red Lake county, Minnesota, with a view to having them thrown open to settlement. In the Indian appropriation bill, which has just passed the house, there is a provision authorizing the negotiation by a department inspector for certain Indian lands in various sections of the country. It is general in scope, and was, incorporated in the bill on the recommendation of Indian Commissioner Jones. Petitions have been received here urging the purchase of the reservation lands in Red Lake county, and, when the Indian bill becomes a law, negotiations will be inaugurated for its cession to the government. It is the intention also to purchase a large tract belonging to the lower Brule Indians in South Dakota. This tract contains 48,000 acres, and the Indians are willing to dispose of it for $1.25 an acre."

DIED MONDAY

Of Consumption at Colorado Springs, Col.

The sad news was received in this city Tuesday of the death of Mrs. Peter Morisitte, which occurred at Colorado Springs, Col., Monday. The remains will be brought to Red Lake Falls for interment.

Mrs. Morisette was a resident of this city for several years, her husband being in business here, and was well and favorably known. Death was caused by consumption.

NO ACTION.

Council Has Not Yet Solved the Bond Question.

The city council did not meet last Thursday night to take action on the bond question, there not being a quorum present. A meeting will probably not be held until next week now, and in the meantime an effort will be made to dispose of the bonds, as the council does not desire to incur the expense of holding another election.

SATURDAY NIGHT

This City Will Be As Light As Day.

Superintendent Leonard Peterson, of the electric light plant, announces that on Saturday evening —unless something unexpected happens—this city will be lighted by electric lights. Everything at the power house is being placed in ship-shape, and most of the connections about town have been made.

SAD CHRISTMAS.

SETTLED AT LAST.

The Case of Lee vs. the City Decided.

The supreme court last week rendered a decision in the case of H. W. Lee vs. the city of Thief Falls. The decision of Judge Watts, who held that Mr. Lee's judgment against the village of Thief River Falls for $154 was not a valid obligation against the city, was sustained.

MERRY XMAS

Enjoyed by the Train Crew on the "T."

The members of the crew of this branch of the Great Northern consider themselves very fortunate this Christmas. The boys had to make the run that day, as usual, and, realizing that they could not be at home, Contractor Scribner, one of the big-hearted men who is operating in the vicinity of Wylie, met the train there Saturday and presented Conductor Lockman with a turkey apiece for every one of the train men. The boys lined up on the platform, gave a howling vote of thanks to "Scrib" and then gave three cheers for Wylie's new palatial depot, while Engineer Milligan pulled the whistle cord long and hard to help out the noise.

To cap the climax, when the train reached Red Lake Falls on Christmas day, Agent Thomas, who has to wear a double-breasted vest to keep his heart from bursting, gave each an invitation to eat dinner on Christmas day with him.

There's no more popular and accommodating train crew on the road than the one that operates on this branch, and the boys begin to realize the fact.

FOR FOUR YEARS.

Terms of County Auditors to Be Lengthened.

It is stated that the State Auditors' Association will again attempt to have a law passed at this session of the legislature making their term of office four years, the same as that of clerk of court. If the auditors do not attempt to make the law operative until after they have served their present term, there will probably not be the opposition to the measure that there was two years ago. The main opposition to the bill before the last legislature was the attempt of the auditors to legislate themselves into office for two years longer than they were elected.

CHRISTMAS.

As It Was Observed in Thief River Falls.

Christmas was very quietly observed in Thief River Falls this year. Services were held in the various churches, and there were numerous family gatherings. Business was generally suspended, and the day was an exceptionally fine one, and will be long remembered by the people of this city.

All of the merchants report that they enjoyed an excellent holiday trade, in fact, much better than was expected.

To Urge Fire Marshal Law.

The local insurance agents have received a circular letter from the State Association of Local Insurance Agents, urging them to use their influence to secure the passage of a law providing for the appointment of a state fire marshal. The duty of such a marshal and his deputies would be to hold an "inquest," so to speak, after every fire and endeavor to ascertain just how the conflagration originated. They would have power to subpœna witnesses and would be clothed with all necessary authority along this line. Massachusetts has such a law, and some of the statements made by the fire marshal appointed under it are quite interesting. In his last annual report, he says that since the establishment of his office in 1894, there have have been 445 arrests for incendiarism, resulting in 270 convictions. One of the convicted parties confessed to have set eight fires, another twelve, another fifteen, while two others together set forty.

Notice of Stockholders' Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that the regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First State Bank of Thief River Falls will be held in the directors' room of said bank on Monday, January 7, 1901, at 7:30 p. m. H. G. Dobner, Cashier.

A PIONEER

Was Dr. J. H. Thomas, Who Died Last Week.

Dr. J. H. Thomas, the well known Crookston dentist, passed away at 1:30 p. m. last Tuesday. The cause of his death was diabetes, and has been foreseen by his attendant physician for some time. The deceased has long been a resident of Crookston and had a large circle of acquaintances, not only in that city, but throughout the valley, having made visits to many of the cities and villages in a professional way for many years. He was upright and honorable in his business dealings, and was respected by all his friends. He was one of the first settlers of this section, taking a claim west of Thief River Falls a number of years ago.

The funeral was held at 2 o'clock last Thursday afternoon at the Episcopal church, under the auspices of the Masonic lodge.

FARMS POPULAR.

The Land Craze Is Affecting All Classes These Days.

The land craze keeps up and bids fair to grow rather than decrease. The demand for improved farms or land that can be at once turned by the plow is bringing thousands into the valley, and, in addition to this, the inquiries from people who wish to know where they can secure government claims are pouring into the U. S. land office by every mail. This has been a rare occurrence during past years. People who took land did so because they believed there was a speculation in the timber, because they wanted a home, or because some friend suggested it to them. Now they are anxiously inquiring where they can file on homesteads, induced to do so by the rising values.

The result is that the coming year will likely see a greater number of homestead entries taken than have been during any of those in recent past.

The development of the new and unsettled country in the northern portion of the state will be among the wonderful things that will mark the opening of the new century.—Crookston Times.

A NATIONAL PARK.

Carnegie Will Be Asked to Buy Part of Red Lake Lands.

A report is current to the effect that there is a united effort being made by some of the prominent men of the Twin Cities to induce Andrew Carnegie to purchase the land surrounding Cass lake, Leech lake and Lake Winnibegoshish, and present it to the people of the country as a national park.

Many of the advocates of the park scheme throughout the state have joined in the effort, and it is understood that they have some assurances of success. The matter was taken up at this time as the result of the efforts of the people of Cass Lake to have all the timber thrown on the market at once. The man who will place the matter before Mr. Carnegie is one of the most prominent politicians in the state of Minnesota.

A GOOD SCHEME.

Teach the Children How to Mark Ballots.

Inasmuch as there are always about one-half of the state and county ballots returned to the county auditor after election, why would it not be a good plan to have those left-over ballots turned over to the schools of the country about six months after election, and give the pupils a biennial lesson in voting? asks the Redwood Gazette. By doing this, the boys, when they arrive at the age of 21 years, would be thoroughly educated in marking their ballots, and also on how to conduct an election. The Gazette believes this is one of the best educational features that could be added to the public school system.

INDIANS GET CASH

And Storekeepers Can Not Get Their Money.

Chief Clerk Morgan, representing Agent Mercer, of the Red Lake and Cass Lake tribes, went up to Red Lake Sunday to make payment of annuities to the Indians. He took along $12,000 in currency, gold and silver, and the Indians will, this year, receive their annuities in actual cash.

Mr. Morgan had as an escort six Indian police, each armed with a Winchester to stand off anyone so reckless as to attempt robbery. The party left the Great Northern line at Solway and drove to the agency.

Heretofore the practice has been to pay these annuities by check, but this has been changed in this instance, and it is said that the new order of things is not at all satisfactory to the storekeepers at the agency at other points on the reservation. The cash is legal tender anywhere, but the checks were taken to the various business men to be realized upon, and these, having claims against the Indians for goods bought, would be able to collect their dues. It is said that considerable loss by this manner of making the payment will be sustained by those who are creditors of the Indians.—Crookston Times.

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think. It is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

ASTOR AGAIN BEFORE PUBLIC.

Owner of Cliveden Increases His Unpopularity by Asking to Close Long-Used Footpath.

Waldorf Astor is rushing into fresh unpopularity. He has formally made application to the Bucks county magistrates for permission to close the footpath over which the public from time immemorial have had the right of way through a portion of the grounds of his Cliveden estate to the banks of the Thames. It is a most picturesque, direct and greatly used path, and he offers in exchange another path which has nothing to recommend it except that it excludes the public from proximity to his house and grounds.

All the surrounding districts are up in arms, and an indignation meeting is mooted to protest against this latest restriction of the pubiic right attempted by the exclusive owner of Cliveden.

It is expected, however, that the magistrates will not grant his demand, but the mere preferring of it has immensely increased his unpopularity, especially as he had already earned the dislike of the boating public by withdrawing the privilege of landing at certain parts of the Cliveden woods, which the preceding owners, the dukes of Sutherland and Westminster, had always accorded.

AMERICAN ENGLISH BAD.

Mark Twain Says University Professors of This Country Can't Talk Without Making Blunders.

Mark Twain was the guest of the Woman's Press club the other day and was beamed upon and lionized. Then he made them a speech. He was talking of the power of concentration and praising Helen Keller's grace of English, when he went on to say: "If I were asked an opinion I would call this an ungrammatical nation. There is no such thing as perfect grammar, and I don't always speak good grammar myself. But I have been foregathering for the last few days with professors of American universities and I've heard them all say things like this: 'He don't like to do it.' 'There was a stir,' 'O, you'll hear that to-night if you listen,' or 'He would have liked to have done it.' You'll catch some educated American saying that. When these men take pen in hand they write with as good grammar as any. But the moment they throw the pen aside they throw grammatical morals aside with it."

TOWN QUICKLY REBUILT.

It Was Destroyed by Fire Last June and Already Is Replaced.

The village of Virginia, near Duluth, Minn., was destroyed by fire June 9 this year. All the business portion was swept away and 300 buildings were burned. Since that time the village has been twice rebuilt, and it has now a business section of solid brick, extending for half a mile along the main street. Immediately after the fire upon every lot that had contained a building there sprang up a mushroom growth of wooden temporary structures. Families lived in box cars along the railroad track, single cars accommodating an entire family with all its furniture, from a sewing machine to a piano. The depot was in a box car, and cloth inclosures served as both dwellings and places of business, says the Boston Transcript.

As soon as the men and material could be secured the wooden huts were torn down and permanent brick buildings began to take their place. Now, four months after the fire, there are over 3,000 feet of solid brick buildings of two and three stories completed or nearly so. There is not a wooden building on the main street. A handsome theater, called, of course, "opera house," capable of seating 700 persons, has been completed; a club for the social wants of mining engineers, business men and their visitors has been organized and a house for it erected. The best hotel north of Duluth is under way, and the village is putting in all the newest conveniences of civilization. An iron mine has been discovered under the town and is being opened. The Virginia of to-day is very different from that of four months ago. It is an excellent example of western hustle.

AMERICAN EXPORTS.

Percentage of Growth in Our Sales to Foreign Nations Shows a Gratifying Increase.

While Europe is naturally our largest market for breadstuffs, the percentage of growth in our sales to other parts of the world is much more rapid. To Europe our exports for the year 1900 crossed for the first time the billion-dollar line, yet our exports to that continent show an increase of but 10 per cent. in 1900 over 1899, and but 50 per cent. over 1890; while to North America our exports in 1900 show an increase of 18 per cent. over 1899 and 95 per cent. over 1890; to South America the increase is slight, owing, in part at least, to the lack of direct steamship communication for export trade; to Oceanica the increase in 1900 over 1899 is 48 per cent. and, over 1890, is 162 per cent.; to Asia the increase in 1900 over 1899 is 43 per cent., and over the year 1890 is 27 per cent.; to Africa the increase in 1900 over 1899 is comparatively small, owing to the interruption of commerce with that continent by the existing war, but compared with 1890 the increase is 324 per cent. To Europe and British North America our exports in 1900 show an increase of 10½ per cent over 1899 and 57 per cent. over 1890, while to other parts of the world our exports in 1900 show an increase of 31 per cent. over 1899 and 91 per cent. over 1890.

TO ADD TO TREASURY BUILDING

Crowded Condition of the Department Requires the Building of a Fifth Story to the Structure.

Owing to the lack of room in the treasury department Supervising Architect Taylor is drafting plans for an additional story for the building in which Uncle Sam's immense store of gold, silver and greenbacks is kept, which, if carried out, will furnish enough room for that department for years to come. The crowded condition of the building interferes more and more each year with the work of the department and steps will have to be taken almost immediately for enlarging the building.

Millions of pension papers, to say nothing of other documents that are filed in the treasury, are constantly being increased, and one floor of the building is entirely taken up by them. Mr. Taylor's plans do not contemplate anything farther than an addition of a fifth floor to the building. The treasury building is perhaps the finest type of Roman architecture in this country, and Mr. Taylor's plans will not mar the harmony of the structure.

The idea is to have the new story set back ten or twelve feet from the line of the building, with a balustrade around the outside. The addition would be placed on the east and west sides of the treasury, leaving the south and north ends as at present. The east and west additions would be connected, making the fifth floor look like a big letter H set on top of the massive pile.

Mr. Taylor estimates that the work can be done for from $150,000 to $200,000.

TALKS OF PARIS EXPERIENCE.

Mrs. Daniel Manning Says She Does Not Believe Mrs. Palmer Made Slighting Remarks.

On the American liner New York, which arrived at New York the other day, was Mrs. Daniel Manning, between whom and Mrs. Potter Palmer, as the leading American women at the Paris exposition, there is said to have been considerable rivalry. Mrs. Manning was met by a welcoming delegation of 27 women, representing Mary Washington Colonial chapter and other chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Her attention was called to the statement by Mrs. Potter Palmer that she herself was originally the only woman on the board of commissioners for the Paris exposition, and that subsequently Mrs. Manning was made a member of the American commission because she was the United States government's official representative at the unveiling in Paris of the Lafayette statue.

"I do not belive that Mrs. Palmer made such a statement," said Mrs. Manning, "for I was made a national commissioner of the United States to the Paris exposition and received my commission long before I started for Paris.

"I have not received the decoration, the Cross of the Legion of Honor, and don't know whether I shall receive it or not."

POPULAR IN GERMANY.

American Circus Wins the Admiration of the People for Way in Which It Is Handled.

An American circus in Germany has astonished the natives by the rapid manner in which the show is handled. The department of state has received a report from Consul Brundage describing the effect on the people of Aix-la-Chapelle of an American circus. The bill-posting was a revelation in that line of work, in magnitude and character; the way in which the tents were erected and the ground prepared astonished the people, and when the circus itself arrived not a workman went to the factories; the spindles were idle all day. At every performance the tent was full, and the usual antipathy toward the United States has been turned into respect and awe. The people now say: "Anything is possible to Americans." Consul Brundage thinks that if an agent for American goods would follow in the wake of the circus these would find ready sale.

SENT BLESSED ON THE SEA.

New Russian Battleship Retvizan Launched with Orthodox Rites.

With the intoning of verses from the Greek church ritual and the chant of Russian sailors; with flags of every civilized nation flying, the stars and stripes and the Russian colors preeminent, as is fitting, and her huge frame decked in gay bunting, the Russian battleship Retvizan glided into the Delaware from the ways at Cramp's shipyard, in Philadelphia, the other afternoon. The ceremony was set to begin at one p. m. and there was no delay. Precisely at 1:32 p. m. the large ship slipped into the water.

Just previous to sending the immense structure of steel and iron down the ways priests of the Greek church, to which Russia conforms, held solemn religious services.

A prayer was said and then the celebrant priest blessed the prow of the marine leviathan with holy water, sprinkling it with a brush dipped into a receptacle holding the water.

Houseboats Moving South.

The annual southern migration of the houseboat dwellers along the Mississippi has been started, and a few of the houseboats have begun their long trip down the river to a warmer climate, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Every autumn hundreds of these boat dwellers start for the south after spending the summer living along the river banks.

OUR COAST DEFENSE.

Rapid Progress Made in Protection Against Foreign Attack.

Thirty Localities Selected Up to the Present Time as Suitable Sites for Fortifications—Island Defenses Demanding Attention.

The important subject of coast defense is the one considered in the annual report of J. M. Wilson, chief of engineers. Generally speaking, he reports most gratifying progress in the [illegible] of the various [illegible] during the last fiscal year. Because the report included the fiscal year only, the subject of the destruction of the Galveston defenses by the September hurricane is left for treatment in a subsequent report.

Some of the points of interest treated by Gen. Wilson are as follows: The torpedo system has been under careful study by expert officers in the light of the experience gained during the Spanish-American war, but so far only minor changes have been proposed.

Up to the present 30 localities have been selected for defense on the coast. No formal projects were added to the list during the past year, but preliminary projects have been framed for the defense of the entrance to Chesapeake bay, and the defense of several other localities is under consideration. Attention has been given to the subject of coast defenses for Porto Rico and the Hawaiian islands, and in view of the importance of these island possessions Gen. Wilson says active measures for their defense should be deferred no longer. A detailed project for the defense of the harbor of San Juan de Porto Rico involves an estimated expenditure of $1,800,000. Preliminary projects for Pearl harbor and Honolulu are also already available and ready for execution as soon as congress shall appropriate the funds.

The war with Spain had the effect of hastening the work on the coast defenses and now, ten years after the work began in earnest, the chief of engineers is able to report that 50 per cent. of the defense work is complete. Twenty-five of the principal harbors of the United States now have a sufficient number of heavy guns and mortars in place to offer an effective defense against naval attack. Existing projects contemplate the mounting of about [illegible] guns for [illegible] defense, or 850 rapid-fire guns and about 900 mortars, at an approximate total cost of $50,000,000. Up to the present time provision has been made for the emplacement of 309 heavy guns, 368 rapid-fire guns and 372 mortars. The armament placed during the war in temporary emplacements will be transferred in time to permanent works, but the temporary works will be held in reserve for an emergency.

Attention is invited to the urgent need for an increase of the artillery arm of the service, which is now too small to take care of the costly and complex defense works.

COURSE NOT TO BE CHANGED.

Yacht Races for America's Cup Will Occur Off Sandy Hook and Not Newport as Suggested.

While there is talk in some quarters of transferring the America's cup races to Newport, the New York Journal states on the best authority that there is not the slightest chance of the races being held there. While the course off Brenton's reef lightship is good, it is not as good a one for a fair test as the Sandy Hook course.

Off Point Judith, Block island and Vineyard sound four tides would have to be encountered during a race, against one or two at Sandy Hook.

For this, if no other reason, it would be unfair to ask Sir Thomas Lipton to accept such a handicap, and there is not the slightest chance of his being requested to do so.

So far as winds go, there is quite as much chance of a breeze off Sandy Hook in August as at Newport, for they have calm days there just as they do at Sandy Hook.

BRAZIL AFTER AMERICAN COAL

United States Minister Bryan at Petropolis has sent to the state department a translation of a letter from Dr. Alcides Medrade, a prominent citizen of Minas-Geraes, Brazil, in which the latter refers to a conversation with state officials of the Brazilian government as to the advisability of importing United States coal for the establishments under the control of the ministries of industry and the navy.

"The ministers," says Dr. Medrade, "showed interest in the matter and will make the experiment."

Highly Educated Nation.

The new census shows that there are 16,738,362 pupils in the schools of this country. It is entirely safe, remarks the Chicago Times-Herald, that the rising generation will know a thing or two.

Comparatively Harmless Pastime.

Recent reports confirm the opinion, says the Pittsburgh News, that suicide in China is not necessarily fatal unless indulged in to excess.

TOD SLOAN NETTLED.

Indignant Because the Prince of Wales Has Turned Him Down.

Declares He Will Ride in English Races, However—London Field Deplores Presence of Yankees at Newmarket Track.

Tod Sloan's temper is seriously ruffled by the loss of his engagement with the prince of Wales, says a London dispatch to the New York World.

"Have you been notified that you will not be retained by the prince of Wales?" the jockey was asked.

"No, but I guess it's true, all the same," was Sloan's reply. "The feeling that has been stirred up against American jockeys here by some of the swells and sporting papers is the worst I ever knew. The prince could not stand against it, I suppose, and I say nothing against him."

"Do you intend to give up racing here?"

"I don't intend to do anything of the kind. I have still as many offers to ride from the best owners as I want. I ride fair, do my best every time and am not beaten yet. You can tell them that in New York."

Marsh, the prince of Wales' trainer, furnished information before it was communicated to Sloan, and the prince, it is said, has rebuked him for it. Despite Sloan's confidence in himself, this canceling of the prince of Wales' engagement is considered the worst blow he has received, as other owners will surely follow suit.

The London Field gives prominence to a letter dealing with Lord Durham's charges against American jockeys, in which the writer regretfully chronicles the complete Americanizing of Newmarket. After saying that he agrees with Lord Durham, the writer adds:

"The rank and file of American visitors are an unmitigated nuisance. Visit Newmarket any morning and what do you see? Buckboards and buggies in place of English traps, American women with two-colored hair and the complexion of a French clown, the American jockey and his entourage of hangers-on; and, worse than all, a huge sprinkling of unattached American loafers, who claim they are friends of the trainers and jockeys, but who in reality are gamblers and limberers of the worst type, who have merely sought to find on the English race course a Tom Tiddler's ground where they will not be interfered with by police to whom they are not known—in fact, Americans during the present season have almost dominated Newmarket. It is English money they have come after, and many of them [illegible] scrupulous how they get it."

AMERICA REWARDS FIVE TARS

Recognizes the Heroism of British Sailors Who Rescued Yankee Crew.

The United States government, through the Liverpool consulate, has substantially rewarded five seamen of the Dominion liner Commonwealth for their gallant services in rescuing the crew of the American schooner Leading Breeze, which was wrecked in a hurricane off Portland, Me., October 16. The Leading Breeze was bound from Boston, Mass., with a cargo of salt for Eastport, Me., and was in a waterlogged and sinking condition when sighted by the Commonwealth.

The rescue was effected with great difficulty in a heavy sea. The schooner's crew was thoroughly exhausted and the men lost everything they possessed. When they landed at Liverpool they were supplied with all they needed at the American consulate.

Capt. McCauley, who skillfully handled the Commonwealth while the rescue was being attempted, and the second officer, Mathias, who was in command of the boat's crew, will also be rewarded.

INCREASE IN COTTON CROP.

Russian official reports show that the area under cultivation in Russian central Asia has increased 30 per cent. this year. The crop is estimated at 7,500,000 pood, or half the Russian requirement, whereas previously only 6,000,000 pood has been procured from Russian possessions. This result is attributed to the increased raw cotton import duty introduced last winter. The situation in the cotton industries is improving.

The wholesale prices of petroleum and petroleum shares have fallen sharply recently. The Novoe Vremya attributes this to a campaign of the syndicates, who wish to discourage any possible competitor from bidding for the petroleum fields recently discovered in Trans-Caspia. There will be an exposition of heating systems at St. Petersburg this winter, and an electro-technic exposition will be held in Moscow in January.

To Punch Cupid Up.

A movement has been started in Kenosha to induce the young men to marry. That this should be necessary would seem to be somewhat of a reflection on the charms and general attractiveness of the Kenosha girls, thinks the Chicago Times-Herald, but possibly they do not so regard it.

The Might Have Been.

THURSDAY, JAN. 3, 1901.

The senatorial contest in this state is now becoming complicated. Not one of the three announced candidates—Evans, Clapp or Tawney—will be able to secure a majority in the Republican caucus and it may result in some one with "barrel" entering the field and winning the nomination. The election of either Evans, Clapp or Tawney would be entirely satisfactory to the rank and file of the Republican party. Let the legislators choose one of these three and no mistake will be made.

EXTENDING THE PRESIDENT'S TERM.

In suggesting two reforms in the electoral system—one providing for extending the presidential term and the other insuring that the presidential candidate with the largest popular vote shall get the office—ex-President Cleveland touches on problems which very likely will have to be solved during the coming century. As the system of government grows in the extent of its operations, and as the burdens resting upon the government become more and more cumbersome, the need for such changes will increase. Already, as Mr. Cleveland points out, the four-year term gives a president little more than a chance to inaugurate policies of state. Of the four sessions of congress in the term, two are so brief as to admit of little more than the passing of the necessary appropriation bills. The first comes at a time when the president is new in office and has many incidental problems to consider. The last falls at a time when political considerations as to the forthcoming election tend to hamper legislation.

Neither of Mr. Cleveland's suggestions is new, but, as time goes by, new reasons for considering them arise. Whatever may be thought of the proposition to make the election of the president dependent upon the popular vote, there is now, more than ever, good reason for weighing the advantages to be gained by a lengthening of the presidential tenure. A president holding office for six or seven years, say, and ineligible for re-election would have time to formulate and carry out a definite policy. The nation would be spared the recurrence every four years of the disturbances created by a national campaign. Far more than all, perhaps, is the fact that the incentive to defer to questions of political expediency would be removed. The highest personal ambition of the president would be to make his one term of office the best possible for the interests of the country, even if his course met the disapprobation of the leading party bosses. He would have no inducement to curry favor with partisans for partisan purposes, and they, in turn, could bring to bear far less influence upon him.

That the need of a constitutional amendment permitting this extension of the presidential term is steadily growing is the opinion of many careful observers of American conditions.—Chicago Record.

If you want to file on a piece of government land it will not be necessary to go to Crookston. Make your filing in Thief River Falls before L. G. Browning, U. S. commissioner for the district of Minnesota.

AUTOMOBILE SPEEDING.

France Alarmed by the Rapidly Multiplying Smash-Ups Due to Recklessness.

Automobile smash-ups are multiplying in alarming fashion at Paris. Regulations intended to control the speed fever that seems to seize every chauffeur, even the least experienced, have been made excessively keen by the tragic death of Comte Raphael Cahen d'Anvers, following so quickly on the heels of that of another well known Parisian, the son of M. Ellison, a banker, to say nothing of such accidents as those in which the American painters, Julius Stewart and William Dannal, were injured, but luckily only slightly.

Comte d'Anvers had already been in several accidents, notably one which amused automobile circles for awhile. In trying a new machine he steered it right into a lake in the Bois de Boulogne. Soon afterward, when in Italy, he narrowly missed killing a member of the royal family. While in Switzerland last summer he was twice upset, and quite recently he knocked over a bicyclist and two pedestrians in the neighborhood of Paris.

Notwithstanding all the accidents nothing seems to turn the automobilists against their favorite sport. On the contrary, new adherents swell their ranks every day. King Leopold II. of Belgium has become one of the most fervent.

Until recently in Belgium he remained satisfied with a modest tricycle, upon which, while riding last year in the park of his chateau at Laeken, he met with a tumble that laid him up for several days. Since he has been here, however, his majesty appears to have become enamored of automobiling, and is making rapid progress in the sport. He is to be met almost every day upon the highways, with his eyes protected by the big black spectacles so dear to the heart of the true chauffeur, practicing how to drive his new machine.

GIRL CAPTURES A WOLF.

Lassoes the Brute, Then Kills It with Her Heavy Boot Spur.

Miss Agnes ("Bossie") Mulhall, daughter of Col. Zach Mulhall, cattle king of Oklahoma and general live stock agent of the 'Frisco railroad, lassoed and killed a big gray wolf on her father's ranch. She had the animal mounted and stuffed and shipped it to Gov. Theodore Roosevelt.

Miss Mulhall is 19 years old, a fearless horsewoman and an expert with lariat and rifle. She is the original from whom was patterned the character of Bossie Brander in Hoyt's "A Texas Steer."

Miss Mulhall and her sister while out riding on their cow ponies one day ran across the wolf. They chased the animal three miles, when Miss Bossie lassoed him and dragged him back to the house. The wolf broke, but she lassoed him again and then killed the brute with her heavy boot spur.

When Gov. Roosevelt was in Oklahoma City recently he heard the story and asked Miss Mulhall for the wolf. Miss Mulhall replied that there were enough wolves in politics.

Later she relented and has shipped the mounted wolf from St. Louis to New York.

NEW RUSSIAN CANAL.

Baltic and White Seas to Be Connected for Strategic and Commercial Purposes.

It is learned that there will be published shortly plans of a new canal of the greatest importance, to be built by Russia, says the Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald.

It will connect the Baltic and White seas, running from St. Petersburg along the Finnish gulf to St. Catherine the new naval harbor on the Murman coast. The Neva river, now seven meters (about 23 feet) deep, will be deepened still more and the canal will run from it to Lake Ladoga, in northwest Russia.

The importance of these plans, from the military point of view, is that they will enable the Russian Baltic fleet to escape, should a blockade ever be attempted on that side of the empire. The distance from St. Petersburg to the important seaport of Ilbau, on the Baltic, will be greatly shortened. This will be part of the new canal's commercial significance.

PAIR OF LILLIPUTIAN TWINS.

Combined Weight of Infants Is Only Two and Three-Quarter Pounds.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Hammer, of New Britain, Conn., have become the parents of twins, which are attracting much attention. Either twin could be put in a man's pocket without trouble. Both are girls. The larger weighs one and one-half pounds, and is seven and one-half inches long; her sister weighs one and one-quarter pounds, and is seven inches long. Their eyes are not really formed, and are not opened yet. They seem more like two little kittens than human beings. Dr. Kellogg, the attending physician, said that both were doing nicely. He thought that it would be necessary to raise them in an incubator.

FORTUNE HUNTER BALKED.

Cousin of Count Castellane Despairs of Getting American Heiress.

Comte Ademar de Castellane, cousin to Comte Boni, who was booked to sail for America on the St. Paul, has decided to remain at Paris. He was bent on marrying an American heiress.

"I may not go at all to the United States," he said, "certainly not for several months. There has been too much talk about my cousin.

"Frenchmen of standing will be slow in future to marry American heiresses. What is the good of their being heiresses if the whole family and a guardian to boot must be consulted before one can touch a cent of one's wife's money?

"The international marriage market has received a shock from which it will be slow to recover."

DISPUTE OVER UNIFORMS.

Controversy Between Gen. Miles and the Quartermasters of the Army.

There is a controversy going on at the war department over the adoption of uniforms for the enlisted men. Some time ago Gen. Miles, commanding the army, submitted recommendations affecting the apparel of the soldiers. Among other things he suggested the campaign hat, with broad brim, one side of which was turned up and fastened with a cockade. The effect was somewhat striking, and the design was adopted from a British design. The army quartermasters resented the interference with their work by Gen. Miles. They have shelved the suggestions from Gen. Miles, and there is a good deal of ill feeling on the subject.

Palaces on Wheels.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. Wilkinson, advertising agent of the Burlington, is among the candidates for deputy grand master of the Odd Fellows, and, while we do not assume to advise them in their selection of officials, yet we should be pleased to see the colonel chosen, as our acquaintance satisfies us that he would make an efficient and capable officer. He has been a member of the order continually for thirty-two years in this state and in Iowa.

Washington dispatches tell of a bill in process of preparation by Congressman Eddy and Senator Nelson that will effect a direct solution of the Chippewa pine problem, and remove the objectionable feature of the Nelson law, as it now stands, with reference to the timber question. The sale of the timber has been delayed, because of friction between the department and the Minnesota delegation, and there is need of a change in the law in the interest of both the Indians and lumbermen.

L. C. Simons spent New Year's day in Red Lake Falls.

The Ladies' Aid of the M. E. church will meet with Mrs. P. O. Bergh Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 9th.

Henry Gorkey passed through the city yesterday enroute to Crookston, where he went to be made a full American citizen.

Word has been received from M. K. Wall, who states that his mother is recovering, and that he will return to this city in a few days.

Will Proctor, a former resident of this city, but now in business in Carrington, N. D., was married last Wednesday evening to Miss Edith Dainard, of St. Hilaire, the Rev. Myers performing the ceremony.

The first newspaper in Minnesota was established in 1849. The beginning of the twentieth century will see 579 papers published in the state that a half century ago was considered a part of the great American desert.

The North Dakota Linseed Oil Mills at Grand Forks is in the market to buy any kind of flax seed, no matter how badly damaged. This will be of much service to farmers who have been unable to sell wet or damp seed.

At a meeting of the Modern Woodmen, Frank Bourque and Herman Ohm were elected delegates to attend a county convention of the Modern Woodmen, to be held at Red Lake Falls January 10, at which time one delegate will be elected to attend the annual state convention to be held at St. Paul.

The sad news has been received in this city from Minneapolis that Miss Stenchfield, one of the teachers in the Central building, has contracted that dreaded disease, consumption, and will not be able to resume her duties in this city, having gone to Colorado to seek relief. Miss Stenchfield has a number of friends in this city, who sincerely hope that she will ultimately recover.

John Sha-na-be-dunce and his squaw came in from Devils Lake last night and went to their home above Thief River this morning. John is one of the Indians who has "run the river" for several summers, and who is forehanded. While here, his squaw made liberal purchases, for which her strapping buck paid without a murmur. They have spent the past two months visiting among the Fort Totten Indians, where John said he left seven ponies and a buggy, and, when accused of losing them in gambling, to which they are so greatly addicted, he smiled and said "yes," and made the motion familiar to card dealers.—Crookston Times, Dec. 31.

An interesting watch-night service was held in the M. E. church Monday evening. The church was opened at 8 o'clock, and the intervening time was spent in social greetings. At 11:30 the service was begun, and, just as the bells tolled the midnight hour, the entire assembly joined hands, forming a circle, and sang the doxology, "Praise God, From Whom All Blessings Flow." The pastor preached a New Year's sermon from the text, "What Doest Thou Here, Elijah?" the theme being, "The Advantage of Having a Purpose in Life." There was a goodly attendance and all seemed well pleased with having been present.

Died Sunday.

Henry Karrow died Sunday morning at an early hour of chronic Bright's disease. The deceased had been a resident of this city for a number of years, and was well known and respected. The funeral services were held yesterday afternoon from the Methodist church, the Rev. Liening officiating.

ODD HARVESTING.

Farmers in Minnesota Cut Flax in the Snow.

The bulk of the flax grown in Kittson county, Minn., this year was harvested under remarkable circumstances. The old way had to be abandoned and mowers brought into use. The sickle bar was entirely under the snow, and, after the flax was cut, it stood as erect as ever, but the hay rake following had no trouble in gathering it, as it was thick and so entwined that the rake caught it all. In this way the farmers of Kittson county have saved nearly their entire flax crop, and, by reason of a big market price, have been paid liberally for their extra efforts. The fall was such an extremely wet one that it was found impossible to get on the fields. Then freezing weather came almost immediately, and thereafter an extremely heavy fall of snow.

ISOLATED TRACTS.

How They Can Be Purchased from the Government.

For the benefit of those who are not acquainted with the manner in which they are put upon the market, it may be stated that isolated tracts are put upon the market when any party is willing to make affidavit that the land surrounding the tract is settled and has been for the past three years, and has at least two witnesses to prove his assertions. They are then sold to the highest bidder for cash at not less than $1.25 per acre. There are a number of isolated tracts in this section.

SMALLPOX

Reported Prevalent in the Lumber Camps.

The Minneapolis papers publish statements about the prevalence of smallpox in some northern Minnesota logging camps. It is stated that the Granby and Deer River camps are quarantined, and that deputy sheriffs are guarding all the roads. The camps are along the eastern branch of the Eastern Minnesota, and ten miles apart. Medical treatment is being given by the Bemidji and Grand Rapids authorities. The spread is said to be due to the system of payment inaugurated this season by the companies. The men are paid off every thirty days, instead of at the end of the season, and, when the men receive their money, they generally go to the nearest town.

GIVEN ON SUNDAY.

Note for Seed Grain Given in Western Polk No Good.

A somewhat peculiar case was tried before Judge Sullivan, of the municipal court of East Grand Forks the first of last week. Ludolph Gies, the plaintiff in the case, sued Mike and Joe Stengel to recover on a note given for seed wheat purchased of the plaintiff last spring. On the 22nd of February, Mr. Stengel made a deal with Gies for the wheat, and, aside from a seed grain note, he said that his brother would also give a note as collateral, those being the only terms upon which Gies would sell the grain to him. Some time in March Stengel got the grain, and at the same time gave a seed grain note a part payment, and also gave Gies a note signed by Joe Stengel as a collateral. The suit was to collect on the latter note, Joe Stengel refusing payment on the grounds that he had signed the note on Sunday, and it was, therefore, void. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict for the defendant. The case will probably be appealed.

I desire at this time to recommend to the patrons of the school who are contemplating sending little children to the primary department that they do not do so at this time. According to the conditions upon which promotions are made, we could not promote them at the end of the year, and it would therefore necessitate having the students go over the same ground next year. Furthermore, it will crowd this department of our school and no doubt add to the irregularity of our attendance.

Very truly yours,
Jas. A. Wilson, principal.

EDDY'S BILL.

Which Will Open Up the Reservation.

As it would be impossible to pass a measure throwing open the Indian reservation at this short session of congress, Representative Eddy had inserted in the Indian bill a clause which authorizes the secretary of the interior to negotiate by and through an inspector with any Indians for any portion of their respective reservations and surplus unalloted lands, any agreements thus negotiated to be subject to subsequent ratification by congress. The bill with the above clause has passed the house and, unless objected to in the senate, we may expect to see an inspector here before spring to negotiate with the Indians.

New Constitution.

The matter of calling a state constitutional convention will undoubtedly be brought up this winter. Our constitution is so clogged with amendments as to be quite confusing, and we should have an entirely new document. The machinery of calling a convention is so slow that that it should be put in motion at once, if there is any intention of reaching a conclusion within the next few years. If the legislature this winter decides, by a two-thirds vote, in favor of a convention, it must be submitted to the people at the next general election. If they approve it, then the 1903 legislature provides for a special election for members of the convention, which could not get a vote on the result of its labors till the election of 1904.

Closing Out.

James Meehan, Jr., offers for sale cheap two store buildings, his residence, one small dwelling house, one lot on LaBree avenue, centrally located, and sixty lots in Meehan's addition. This property will be sold cheap to cash purchasers, as Mr. Meehan intends to leave for the west as soon as he disposes of his property. Now is the time for people who intend to remain here to invest in good paying property at a price that is sure to be a good paying investment.

LIKES OUR WARSHIPS

Russia to Place Orders with American Shipbuilders.

So Well Pleased with the Varing, It Is Said, That She Will Place Contracts for Five More Fighting Vessels.

Russia is to place orders with American shipbuilders for five new battleships during the next year. Secrecy seems to be the order with those in a position to give information, but the bare fact that in prosecuting her naval construction programme Russia will favor American shipbuilders comes from an authentic source, according to Joseph Spencer Kennard, one of the commissioners from this country to the Paris exposition, who has arrived at New York on the steamship Touraine.

Contracts for five battleships will involve more than $20,000,000 and the fact that Russia contemplates placing these orders here is regarded as a recognition of the merits of the American built Varing, which, designed to make a speed of 23 knots, showed herself capable in her speed trials of maintaining a speed of 24.6 knots. Now being pushed to completion by the Cramps, who built the Varing, is the battleship Retvizan, the first battleship built here for a foreign country. She was launched October 23. Beyond the information that the order was to be placed here Mr. Kennard said that he could say nothing, and that he could not with propriety make known the name of his informant.

Waldimir Teplow, the Russian consul general, also returned on the Touraine, after an absence of four months in Russia. He left St. Petersburg October 20. When seen at his home Mr. Teplow said he could not confirm the report of the prospective placing of orders for battleships in this country, but he said that there was such enthusiasm in Russia over the Varing and Retvizan that it is likely the next warships built for Russia will be laid in American shipyards.

"All Russians," he said, "are perfectly satisfied with the Varing and the Retvizan. They are fine ships. We think American builders are among the best in the world. Some builders show a sample ship and obtain an order for one like it, but the finished product likely does not correspond with the sample. But this is not so with American builders. They make us a ship just like the model."

SUGAR MAKING.

Progress Which France Has Made in the Growing of Beets and Extracting the Sugar.

Jules Helot has written a history of the beet sugar industry in France, says Consul Covert at Lyons. The beginning of the industry in France was really under Napoleon I., in 1810-12, when he established five great schools for study and instruction in "sugar chemistry," and four large imperial sugar mills, exempt from all taxation. There are now in France 340 sugar factories, the average production of which has increased threefold in 18 years.

These factories consume 540,000 pounds of beets every 24 hours. The average daily consumption of Germany is 860,000 pounds. Since 1888 the consumption of coal in the sugar mills of France has fallen from 442 pounds to 286 pounds per ton of beets.

Country.	1879-'80.	1889-'90.	1899-1900
Germany	415,000	1,261,000	1,790,000
Austria-Hungary	420,000	799,000	1,200,000
Russia	500,000	626,000	900,000
France	478,000	755,000	805,000
Belgium	75,000	173,000	300,000
Holland	24,000	56,000	180,000
Other countries	8,000	87,000	275,000
Totals	1,720,000	3,657,000	5,450,000

Crooked Houses in Holland.

There are many buildings in cities in Holland which were originally and unmistakably built out of the straight. For instance, not far from the Hotel Vieux Doelen, where the delegates to the peace conference stayed, there is an extension being built to one of the churches, and, although the walls are not yet completed, they lean outward more than 12 inches. Another instance of this is found in some of the corner houses, whose walls lean out over each street. In many cases new houses are evidently put up to match the houses alongside. Strangely enough, though, there are comparatively few cases on record of collapse.

Strikes in Germany.

The year 1899 was a record breaker in Germany as regards strikes. No fewer than 1,297 strikes took place, against 985 during 1898. In the strikes of 1899 the number of workmen participating was 100,779, and 7,113 establishments were involved. Nineteen hundred and twenty-eight were obliged to shut down completely, while the rest were able, partly, to continue operations.

Only four bachelors have been named for places in the Hall of Fame, and it isn't likely that even they would have got in, says the Chicago Times-Herald, if the women had been voting.

Copper Output for 1900.

If expectations are realized, the output of copper for 1900 will reach 325,000,000 pounds, valued at $42,250,000, the largest on record.

UNCLE SAM'S MAILS.

Over Half a Billion Miles Traveled in Its Delivery.

Cost of the Service Totals $57,160,598 —Alaska Has Letter Mail Delivery All Winter—Service in Island Possessions.

The annual report of W. S. Shallenberg, second assistant postmaster general, has just been made public. It shows that on June 30 last the annual rate of expenditure for the inland mail service was $55,146,060; for foreign service, $2,014,538; total expenditures, $57,160,598.

There were 22,834 star routes, with a total mileage of 269,858, involving an annual rate of expenditure of $5,133,378; 1,945 special office routes, 182 steamboat routes, 2,668 railroad routes (annual expense, $33,424,783); 228 railway post office car routes (annual expense, $4,369,000); 8,695 railway post office clerks (annual expenditure, $3,946,424); 7,190 mail messenger routes, 220 wagon routes (in cities); 287 electric and cable car routes; five pneumatic tube routes (annual expenditure, $222,266.) Necessary and special facilities on trunk lines of railroads involved an annual rate of expenditure of $105,723 and mail equipments cost $325,744.

The routes of all kinds in the domestic mail service cover over half a million miles in length and the miles traveled over them per annum were 459,205,773. An average of almost nine trips a week on each route was maintained throughout the country.

Letter mail for the interior of Alaska was carried last winter by a service that was reasonably well performed. For the coming winter the arrangements double the frequency of dispatches for points supplied by various overland routes, supplying the offices along them with letter mail four times a month. Mail will be carried by reindeer this winter from Eaton to Kotzebue, a point north of the arctic circle. Plans for various overland routes are announced and the necessity emphasized of cooperation with the war department in opening an all-American military and post road from Valdez to the upper Yukon.

The service in Porto Rico, Hawaii and the temporary military postal service in China are touched on briefly.

In the railway mail service matter too illegibly or improperly addressed to permit delivery amounted to 14,617,284 pieces, an increase of over 11,000.

INSURANCE AGAINST STRIKERS

A Number of Austrian Manufacturers Form an Association with a Novel Object.

A number of Austrian manufacturers have formed an association for insurance against strikes, according to United States Consul Hossfeld, at Trieste. It is the object of the association to indemnify its several members for all losses sustained by them from unjust strikes which may break out in their respective establishments. Each member is to pay a weekly premium equal to from three to four per cent. of the amount of his pay roll. When a strike occurs, a committee will be appointed to investigate all the circumstances and if the cause of the strikers be found just, no indemnity shall be paid.

A similar insurance association, although on a smaller scale, is said to have been organized in Germany. "Both the Austrian and German associations, it appears," says Consul Hossfeld, "recognize in principle the justness of strikes, which is, in Germany at least, an important concession to labor."

WILL STUDY NIPPUR LORE.

Assyriologist Hilprecht Plans to Commence Work on Tablets.

Dr. Herman V. Hilprecht, the famous Assyriologist of the University of Pennsylvania, who made the startling discovery at Nippur, Babylonia, is making arrangements to translate the large number of cuneiform tablets and inscriptions secured.

For 12 years the excavators have been accumulating these tablets and inscriptions, until now the university museum contains a large number, of which but few have been translated. The work of tabulating them is the most difficult connected with these discoveries. Their translation will be begun at once under the superintendence of Dr. Hilprecht and his assistant, Dr. A. T. Clay.

As a large part of the manuscripts and tablets have not yet reached this country and cannot possibly arrive for at least six months, these two scholars will confine their work to translating tablets secured on former expeditions.

SAHARA TRIP BY BALLOON.

Several French Engineers Plan to Make an Air Voyage Across the Desert.

A dispatch to Paris from Algiers says several French engineer officers intend to attempt to cross the desert of Sahara in a balloon. They believe that regular winds will bring them to Timbuctoo. It is hoped in Paris that the war minister, Gen. Andre, will not allow the attempt to be made, because the officers would surely be massacred if they landed anywhere outside of Timbuctoo.

The New York man who stole $700,000 was caught in Boston, which the inhabitants of the latter city, says the Chicago Times-Herald, probably consider the most praiseworthy act of his life.

LIVES IN WIFE'S TOMB.

Brooklyn Man Who Had Resided with a Corpse for the Last Five Years.

In Evergreen cemetery in Brooklyn Jonathan Reed has lived for five years in the tomb where the body of his dead wife lies in a last sleep. Never for one day since his wife died in 1895 has he left the body alone, and when his time shall come there is a receptacle for his dead body close to that of his wife's, whom he loved so long and so well, says the Chicago Tribune.

Five years ago Reed looked on while the light went out of his wife's eyes. She was conscious to the last. As she lay with her dying eyes fixed on him he was moved to a solemn promise that so long as he lived he would keep watch over her form.

"Her answer was a faint, peaceful smile," said the husband, "and you will see that I have kept my promise."

To do so, Mr. Reed, who was a well to do drayman in the northern part of the state, sold his business. He had a tomb built of red granite and made comfortable for habitation of both the living and the dead. He gathered all his wife's trinkets together, and with them has adorned the walls of the strange home. Over the coffin of the dead woman he has draped a pall of bright colors, and when he wishes to look on the face of his dead he has only to pull it aside to see the features which are so slightly changed in all these years. He has no morbid fancies. He feels the companionship that he lost when she died, and for that reason he stays in the house of death. He holds that the only vital difference between himself and his wife is that he has the power of world communication. When that is gone he and she will be the same.

WHEN VISITING ABROAD.

People Likely to Be Interested in Things Pertaining to Their Own Business.

"It is perfectly natural," said one whose own business takes him about more or less, relates the New York Sun, "that a man should be interested, wherever he may be, in things pertaining to his own business. I know I am in mine; when I strike a strange place I like to go through the quarter where they carry on the business that I am engaged in and see how they run things in it there. But I have only met with two illustrations of this sort of thing that seemed to me to be rather curious as well as interesting.

"Talking with a New York paint manufacturer about paint of a certain kind, the paint man said, incidentally, that he had seen paint of that color on walls in Pompeii. Oddly enough, the other curious illustration arose out of the same ancient city. A New Yorker engaged in the manufacture of lead pipe said incidentally to something that he was telling me about lead pipe that he had found in Pompeii lead pipe in fair condition. The pipe, while covered with an incrustation that had gathered upon it in the long time it had been buried, yet cutting with as bright and perfect a cleavage as though it had been made yesterday, instead of many centuries ago.

"These two things interested somewhat the paint man and the lead man, respectively, and they certainly interested me."

CLUB LIFE IN CHINA.

Nothing Comparable with It in Splendor in London or New York City.

Club life is not confined to civilized western countries. The rich Chinaman has had his club for centuries, and, as a rule, in the elegance and splendor of the internal decorations there is nothing comparable with it in London or New York, says the London Mail. Most of the larger Chinese cities, like Canton or Peking, contain a club for mandarins and rich men with pretentions to rank. Some have a political taint, some are merely social, but all have one peculiar feature. This is a room or oratory set strictly apart for religious exercises. In the oratory the image of a Chinese god is placed. From time to time members of the club enter the sanctuary to offer their devotions. Apparently it is no uncommon thing at the beginning or successful ending of a great enterprise—such as, say, the murder of an enemy or the consummation of a political conspiracy—to see a Chinaman hastening from the secular part of his club bearing a rich offering, or a prayer, for the god in the club sanctuary. He observes his devotions with a gravity that bears witness to his sincerity. Some devout Chinamen visit the god the moment they enter the club building, and again prostrate themselves the last thing before leaving. The club god is not usually a war divinity, but now, in the centers where the Boxers hold sway undisturbed, it is more than probable that the Boxer god has been placed in all the clubs.

Kaffir Beer.

Kaffir beer is made from Indian corn which is worked into a pulp with wooden stampers, sufficient sugar and water is added, and the climate does the rest. When the beer is ready every hut will receive its share, and a certain quantity will be put aside for the "beer drink," a sorry, but gigantic kind of feast.

BOTH YACHTS DESIGNED.

New Challenger for and New Defender of America's Cup Being Constructed.

Sir Thomas Lipton is conferring at Glasgow with George L. Watson, the designer of the new challenger for the America's cup, says a London dispatch to the New York Herald.

From authoritative sources it is learned that Sir Thomas' visit was for the purpose of signing contracts for the building of the yacht. These have been placed with the Hendersons, Meadowside yard, the builders of the Thistle, the three Valkyries, the Britannia, the Meteor and the Sybarita.

The date specified in the contracts for the handing over of the vessel is March 30.

The greatest precautions are being taken to preserve secrecy regarding the design. A footpath along the banks of the Clyde, which skirts the Hendersons' yards, is already closed.

It is now almost a certainty that the new defender will be plated with bronze, says a New York Journal and Advertiser dispatch from Providence. It is known that the Herreshoffs are partial to this metal. They have experimented with various metals for tensile and torsional strength, and none has been found so satisfactory to Capt. Nat's mind as a smooth bronze, which successfully resists corrosion and presents the minimum of friction with the maximum of lightness and durability.

Capt. Nat, it is understood, has completed his model of the defender and reduced many of his plans to writing. The work of construction, it is rumored, will probably be started within a few weeks.

GERMAN SHIP INDUSTRY.

Badly Cramped, It Is Said, by the Lack of Suitable Wharfage.

Germany's great industry, that of shipbuilding, is handicapped by the lack of wharfage facilities, according to Consul Winter at Annberg, who says: "During the last ten years shipbuilding in Germany has become a great industry. Old wharves have been torn away and new and larger ones constructed in their place. The present capacity of all the wharves does not meet the demands of the German merchant marine. Many orders must still be placed in foreign countries. At present 22 ships are being built in England for Hamburg alone. During the first half of the present year the dock owners and shipbuilders of Stettin, Kiel, Flensburg and Bremen have increased their capital stock on the whole by $1,378,000. Many new enterprises are being planned. In the neighborhood of Nordenham, on the lower Weser, large wharves are being projected. A wharf for Stralsund is being planned which will cost nearly $1,000,000. It is also reported that a German-Belgian syndicate will build a wharf in Antwerp under the auspices of the Bremen Vulcan works. The German merchant marine now numbers 1,209 steamers, of 2,159,919 tons."

QUEEN AS A LIFE SAVER.

Plunges Into the Surf and Rescues Her Disabled and Drowning Boatman.

A dispatch to the New York Journal and Advertiser from Lisbon says: The queen of Portugal, at Cascais, a fashionable seaside resort, made a thrilling rescue. She has been staying at the royal palace of Cascais, and was on the beach watching Cataino Croom, her boatman, bringing his boat in to shore.

Suddenly a huge wave overturned the boat. Croom's arm was broken and he was overcome by the undertow, which carried him beneath the waves.

The queen is an expert swimmer, and, seeing that her boatman was drowning, she sprang into the sea in her clothing before any of her attendants could prevent her.

With rapid strokes she swam to the boatman's side and held him up until persons on the shore put out in boats and rescued both the queen and her boatman.

Croom was taken to the royal palace.

FINDS A FREAK OF BOTANY.

While strolling in the woods near Maywood, Ill., the other afternoon Charles Westcott, president of the village, found a remarkable work of nature. Upon the white surface of a large piece of fungus at the foot of an old dead tree there was drawn an artistic pastoral scene. A close examination by the aid of a powerful glass, Mr. Westcott says, proves beyond a doubt that the drawing is the work of nature.

The picture represents a comfortable farmhouse and grounds. The barn doors stand open, displaying the well-filled granaries and haymow, fat stock stand in the fields and the farmer, prosperous-looking, is at the gate ready to mount a well-laden farm wagon filled with the fruits of his industry.

PEOPLE MARRY OLDER.

Some Interesting Matrimonial Facts Gleaned at a Missouri County Courthouse.

Ages given in marriage licenses in the recorder's office show that men and women are marrying later in life than ten or twenty years ago. The average age, says the Kansas City Journal, is considerably above that of ten years ago, and very much above that of 20, 30 or 40 years ago. Formerly it was the rule rather than the exception for brides to be 17 or 18 and grooms 20 or 21. Now it is almost reversed. Figures for several months show that the average bride's age is between 25 and 26 and the groom's between 28 and 29.

The average of the first six couples applying for license at the recorder's office on a recent day was 33⅓ for the men and 32 for the women. When the number of couples had reached nine the figures were reduced to 30 for the men and 28 for the women. These figures, however, are not a good criterion; the couples applying that day happening to be a little older than ordinarily. Figures also indicate that couples marrying in May are younger on the average than those marrying in the fall of the year.

"I don't know to what to attribute the tendency to marry later in life," said the marriage license clerk, "unless it is that it takes the young man longer to get a start in the world than it did 20 or 30 years ago. The country is more developed, there are not so many opportunities open to him, and he must wait longer before he finds himself in a position that would warrant his taking the responsibility of supporting a family. In other words, men no longer marry young because they can't afford it."

COOK ISLANDS ANNEXED.

Great Britain Takes Formal Possession of Them at the Request of the Chiefs.

On October 3, last, the governor of New Zealand landed on the Cook islands and formally annexed them to the British empire at the unanimous request of the chiefs and people. For 12 years the islands have been under the protection of Great Britain and every enactment of the native legislature has had to receive the approval of the British resident at Raratonga before being regarded as law. But there has never been any formal annexation of the group and the natives are probably delighted to have that ceremony carried out.

The islands, lying far southeast of Samoa, are off the usual lines of steamer traffic, and most of their trade is carried on with New Zealand and New South Wales. They properly bear the name of the great navigator Cook, for he discovered the greater part of the group on his second journey in 1773, and made them better known in his voyage of 1777. Cook named one of the islands Hervey island, and the missionaries who settled there somehow got into the habit of applying the name Hervey to the whole group, and to-day they are called indifferently, the Cook or Hervey islands.

All of them are coral islands, lifted only a little way above the sea level, except Raratonga, the largest and most populous, whose volcanic mountain rises to a height of 4,000 feet. Raratonga is one of the pearls of the South seas, and is rich in all the products of the southern archipelagoes. The natives have long used cotton cloth as money, but coin is now likely to be introduced.

COMMON CACTUS.

One That Lived Seven Years Under a Sealed Glass Case in Berlin.

One of the commonest of cacti in gardens is the Echinopsis multiplex, a small subglobular species, with five or six sharp ribs, and sparsely sprinkled with a few clusters of long, black spines on the sharp edges of the ribs. It sends up occasionally a large, white tubular flower, which, like so many of the family, opens at night and soon withers away. In Germany a druggist named Ludwig Rust placed a specimen under a sealed glass seven years ago, and it is said to be yet in a "thriving condition," to the surprise of the scientific men of Berlin, who are puzzled to know where it obtains its carbonic acid from. Many suggestions are advanced as to the source of this element. So far as the published account goes, however, there is no indication that the specimen was weighed before it was encased or weighed after its seven years of entombment—no evidence, it may be said, that any carbonic acid was absorbed. It is just as likely to be a case of dormancy. It is now well understood that in the absence of exciting causes dormancy in vegetation may be retained indefinitely.

Killing Rats Not Cruelty to Animals.

Rats are not animals in the eyes of the law, as the Humane society of Toronto found to its intense disgust when it tried to stop the slaughter of them by dogs.

KNOCKED OUT BY HORNETS.

Policeman Sets Fire to a Nest and Damages His House and Incidentally Himself.

Police Officer Charles Eacock sent his wife and mother-in-law to the mountains and then thought it would be a good time to destroy a nest of hornets in his kitchen.

He poured some coal oil upon a broom and lit the oil with a match. Then he jammed the burning broom against the nest and held it there, all the time holding a towel over his head. When he thought the nest was destroyed he pulled the towel from his head, only to discover that the burning broom had set fire to the kitchen. He dropped the broom and started to draw a bucket of water, but the hornets did not give him time. Seeing their nest destroyed, they flew at Eacock's head and tried to crawl into his ears, nose and mouth, occasionally stopping long enough to ascertain if they were on solid footing.

Eacock abandoned the house, and when he got outside he found the fire had burned through to the roof. He ran to a fire station, and the firemen carried over some extinguishers and soon put out the blaze.

Eacock entered the house by the front door and locked the kitchen door, leaving the hornets to do the best they could. He spent the remainder of the day rubbing himself with liniment. When it came time for him to don his uniform and go to work he was horrified once more. He could not get his helmet on his head. The hornets' stings had made his head so large that the helmet would only cover a portion of it at a time. His eyes and lips were swollen, and he was a sorry-looking policeman. He telephoned to headquarters that he was ill, and had a three days' lay-off without pay.

"The way to fight fire is with fire, so I just burned them out," said Eacock in relating his experience. "I am the greatest hornet fighter in the city, and if you see anyone who wants hornets exterminated send him to me. It's as simple to me as painless dentistry."

Woman's Club in Honolulu.

Unique among women's clubs, perhaps, is that which was launched five years ago in Honolulu and is now reported to be at last on a firm footing. It was started by an American school-teacher, who was wont to invite young women to her home once a week for informal conversation on some topic. The outgrowth was a full-fledged club of 34 members, most of them being Hawaiians, with a mixture, however, of Chinese and Portuguese. The president this year is a Chinese girl, who wears her quaint national costume when she fills the official chair.

Occupations for Women.

The seven occupations open to women in 1839 were teaching, needlework, keeping boarders, factory working, typesetting, bookkeeping and domestic service. Four hundred are open to them to-day.

THURSDAY, JAN. 10, 1901.

Mr. Louis Windmuller has a thoughtful paper in the January number of the North American Review, in which he proposes certain substitutes for the ship subsidies, which are provided for in the bill now before congress. The provisions of the bill, in Mr. Windmuller's judgment, are more calculated to develop the construction of fast passenger steamers than the creation of a merchant marine capable of transporting to the various markets of the world the products of our mines and fields and manufactures, and he would pay a moderate bounty on each ton of American produce exported in American bottoms. The necessity of freight steamers is illustrated by the facts connected with the exports of coal:

"The annual exports of coal and coke from Great Britain aggregate nearly 50,000,000 tons Our exports, probably, will reach 8,000,000 tons for 1900, against 5,000,000 for 1899. We exported in the first nine months of 1900, to Europe alone, some 500,000 tons of coal, against 19,316 tons during the same period in 1899. In 1900 the cost of our coal was about $2.50, and the freight to the Mediterranean ports, where we have begun to compete with England, amounts to $5—in some cases to $5.75—per ton. These freights have been especially high, because the demand for steamers to carry coal has been greater than the supply. If a sufficient number of vessels could be found gradually to reduce the freight to normal rates, not only could we, in all probability, satisfy the urgent demand demand which prevails now, but the export of coal, which we can mine for less money than English operators, might permanently be extended to countries which heretofore have been supplied by England, and which England now finds it difficult to supply, since the demand for English coal by English manufacturers has increased. The price for English coal has gradually advanced in consequence."

Fishing for Suckers.

A man who does not take his home paper, but occasionally answers advertisements in "story papers," has had some interesting experiences, says an exchange. He learned that, by sending $1 to a yankee, he could get a cure for drunkenness, and, sure enough, he did. It was to take the pledge and keep it. Later on, he sent fifty 2-cent stamps to find out how to raise turnips successfully, and he found out: "Just take hold of the tops and pull." Being young, he wished to marry, and sent thirty-four 1-cent stamps to a Chicago firm for information as to how to make an impression. When the answer came, it read: "Sit down on a pan of dough." That was a little tough, but he was a patient man and thought he would yet succeed. The next advertisement he answered read: "How to double your money in six months." He was to convert his money into bills, fold them, and he would see his money doubled. He was slow to learn, so he sent a dollar to find out "how to get rich." "Work like the devil and don't spend a cent." That stopped him, but his brother wrote to find out how to write a letter without a pen or ink, and was told to use a lead pencil. He paid $5 to learn how to live without work, and was told, on a postal card, to "fish for suckers like we do."

WHAT HE LACKED.

Ignatius Donnelly Had the Other Qualifications.

The death of Ignatius Donnelly has removed from the forum of Minnesota politics one of the most prominent and spectacular members. Ambitious, brainy, clever, he was a man who, but for the lack of poise and balance, would have been one of the foremost statesmen of the country. In discussing him the day after his death, one of the state's most prominent warhorses, a man who has taken part in every noted campaign the state has ever seen, and who has been arrayed both beside and against Donnelly time and time again, said:

"Minnesota never produced a man whose intellect more perfectly fitted him to be a leader of men than Ignatius Donnelly. Clear-headed, clever, with a wonderful power of rhetoric and logic and oratory, he was one of a thousand. Only one thing was lacking to make him a second Webster or Clay, the absence of a portion of the mental mechanism corresponding to that little thing with two balls which buzzes around on the top of an engine, and without which the whole world would race away at a rate which would soon smash wheels and rods to atoms. They call the thing in mechanics a governor, and governor was the one, and, perhaps, the only thing which Donnelly lacked. Had it not been for this, he would have been today at the head and front of western statesmen, at least a United States senator, and, perhaps, filling even a higher office than that."

"Twentieth Century" Church.

The "Twentieth Century" Presbyterian church wishes its friends a happy New Year. We enter upon the new century under the most favorable auspices. We are well organized and well equipped. Our congregation is steadily growing. Our membership is increasing. Our workers are filled with enthusiasm. Every department of the church is in a state of prosperity. The Sabbath school and Y. P. S. C. E. are well sustained.

Our policy is a broad one. By conscientious and sympathetic effort, we hope to make for ourselves an indispensable place in the public heart. We have the profound conviction that no community can flourish long unless religious sentiment is knit into the very warp and woof of its constitution. This is no idle dream, but a fact abundantly substantiated by the testimony of history. "Man does not live by bread alone. Man has a threefold nature—physical, intellectual and spiritual. Each requires nourishment. The Ogahmah and the public schools are doing their duty. We shall endeavor to do ours.

We hate prejudice, narrow-mindedness and cant; we believe in, and try to practice, charity, catholicity and originality. Our motto is: "With charity toward all and malice toward none."

We hope soon to have an efficient choir organized of some of the best musical talent in the city, which will aid us materially in making our services attractive and helpful.

We welcome back into our midst the teachers of the public schools, whose co-operation in Christian work we esteem.

Strangers who are staying in town over Sunday will always find a warm welcome at the "Twentieth Century" church. Our sympathy is with the young man—especially the young man who is far away from home. He will be thrice welcome in our midst.

We do not believe that "pure religion and undefiled" tends to make a man "goody-goody," but, on the contrary, to build up in all manly qualities. The basis of a successful career is moral character, and the basis of moral character is religious conviction.

Naturally, the transfer from academic circles to practical life was not altogether easy; but we have found the public charitable and disposed to overlook our blunders. And what delightful people we have met since coming to Thief River Falls!

The energetic and amiable pastor-at-large of the presbytery, the Rev. W. F. Finch, of Fergus Falls, is in the city and expresses himself as highly pleased with the outlook.

Our theological library is en route, and when it arrives we hope to gather therefrom new sermonic inspiration.

We observe with pleasure the increased activity of the M. E. church, and congratulate our ecclesiastical sister on having secured the services of so courteous and capable a man as the Rev. Sterling.

Sixty-Six Million Cents Coined.

There were coined last year at the United States mints 66,833,700 bronze cents. The number was almost large enough to supply every inhabitant with one of these useful coins. The mints turned out more cents last year than ever before, but they have not been inactive in preceding years. Their output in 1895 was thirty-eight millions; in 1896, thirty-nine millions; in 1897, fifty millions, and in 1898, forty-nine millions. The cents which are in circulation seldom are much worn. They disappear somehow before they have had time to get rubbed smooth as nickels and silver quoins do What becomes of the cents is as much a mystery as what becomes of the pins. Millions of these small coins are minted yearly, and yet there is a steady demand for more. Nobody hoards cents. Nobody melts them down—a fate which befalls gold coins often. Then, what becomes of all the bronze cents?

LONGEVITY OF VARIOUS RACES

At Twenty the American's Expectation of Life Is Longer Than Other Nationalities.

It has often been remarked that while nothing is so uncertain as the duration of any given human life, nothing is more certain than the aggregate of years which may be assigned to a group of 100 persons or more at any particular age. The expectation of life at a given age, to use the actuarial phrase, differs considerably, as might be expected, in different countries, and Englishmen may be surprised to learn that they are not the longest lived among the white races. At the age of 20, says the London Globe, an Englishman in average health may expect to live 42 years, and any life office will grant him a policy based on that probability. The American's expectation is for a slightly longer period. On the other hand, a German lad of 20 can count upon little more than 39½ years. It would seem, therefore, that the restlessness attributed to the American temperament does not necessarily conduce to the shortening of life, nor the composure of the German to its prolongation. Possibly the better feeding and clothing of Americans in the lower classes of the population is the principal cause of their greater longevity. Their position is, at any rate, maintained in later as well as in earlier years. The American who has reached 60 may look to complete 14 years more while the Britisher's expectation is only about 13 years and ten months, and the German's as nearly as possible 12 months less. Both at 20 and 60 the Frenchman's prospect is a little better than the German's and a little worse than the Englishman's.

A JOCKEY'S SENSATIONS.

One of Them Tells How He Feels When Riding Down the Home Stretch.

"If you ride with your head down—that is to say, bent slightly, so that the wind does not beat right on to your face—you can breathe easily, but if you hold your mouth wide open and let the air beat right in your face, then you will have great difficulty in breathing, and if the race is a long one you will become exhausted by the end of the ride." So said a well-known jockey when questioned on the subject of what his sensations were when riding in a race, relates the Cincinnati Enquirer.

"A mile in 1:40 is at the rate of 36 miles an hour, so, you see, a race horse travels at train speed.

"If you want to know how it feels to go through the air at race horse speed, just hang your head out of a railway carriage window, turning your face toward the way the train is traveling.

"At the same time imagine that you are sitting in a saddle and have to hold on to your horse and guide him on to victory, if possible, keeping him from being run down or interfered with.

"It is no easy task to ride a horse in a race. The jockey must have all his wits about him. He does not have much time to think how he feels. When riding in a neck-and-neck race down the home stretch I forget everything except that I must strain every nerve to pass the other horses; no thought is then given to the plaudits from the grand stand."

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

TIME AND SPACE are practically annihilated by the ocean cables and land telegraph systems which now belt the circumference of Old Earth in so many different directions. "Foreign parts" are no longer foreign in the old meaning of the term. Europe, Africa, Asia, are "next door" to us. What happens there to-day we know to-morrow—if we read THE CHICAGO RECORD, whose Special Cable Correspondents are located in every important city in the world outside of the United States. No other American newspaper ever attempted so extensive a service; and it is supplemented by the regular foreign news service of The Associated Press. For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

FREE A large map of the world on Mercator's Projection, about 22½x16 inches in size, beautifully printed in colors, with a large-scale map of Europe on the reverse side, will be mailed to any address free of charge on receipt of request accompanied by two 2-cent stamps to cover postage and wrapping. The maps illustrate clearly how comprehensively the service of THE CHICAGO RECORD covers the entire civilized world. Address THE CHICAGO RECORD, 181 Madison street, Chicago.

UNDER ARREST.

Two Well Known Men of This City Arrested Last Week.

Chris Porter, the drayman, and John Jarneson were last week arrested upon the charge of willful and malicious destruction of property. The complaining witness was L. Oriard, of Germantown, and the warrant was issued by a justice of peace of that town. The case has been continued until tomorrow, and, as both the parties are well known in this city and have always had a good reputation, the News asks the public to suspend judgment and await the findings of the court. It is generally believed here that Porter and Jarneson were merely used as tools, and that the real culprit is James Meehan, Jr., who is now advertising to sell all of his property in this city preparatory to going to south Africa to escape the jurisdiction of the Marshall county justice.

The whole trouble grew out of the fact that some time ago Mr. Meehan furnished lumber to Mr. Oriard, who was then a merchant at Germantown, and for which Mr. Oriard did not pay. A mechanic's lien was foreclosed upon the building, and, by order of Judge Watts, Mr. Meehan was delcared to be the owner of the building. He sent Porter and Jarneson up to have it removed, and, while at work, they were placed under arrest. The outcome of the trial will be watched with interest.

DEFEAT AT LAST

Judge Nic Tarrant Runs Up Against the Real Thing.

Judge Nic Tarrant ran amuck Judge Lochren, of the U. S. court, Tuesday, and, as a result, he has the appearance of a defeated wrestler. In the case of the Acme Heating company vs. Wylie Tindolph, the judge of the U. S. court told the judge of the city court to dismiss it—and, as Nic is an accommodating fellow, the request was granted.

Married.

At St. Bernard's Catholic church Monday, at 9 o'clock, George Morin and Miss Elizabeth De-Laurier were joined in the holy bonds of matrimony. Mr. Morin is well known in the city, and is a young man of good character, honest and energetic. The bride has also been a resident of this place for a number of years, and has many friends in this community. She is a bright and affable lady, and the groom is to be congratulated upon his selection. The groom was dressed in the conventional black, and the bride wore white silk. At 9 a. m. the couple marched down the aisle of St. Bernard's church, attended by Harvey Belair and Miss Nina Paranteau, and Rev. Fr. Ansgar pronounced the words that united them forever. A wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride's parents, and a reception held in the evening. The News wishes them success on their journey through life.

Closing Out.

James Meehan, Jr., offers for sale cheap two store buildings, his residence, one small dwelling house, one lot on LaBree avenue, centrally located, and sixty lots in Meehan's addition. This property will be sold cheap to cash purchasers, as Mr. Meehan intends to leave for the west as soon as he disposes of his property. Now is the time for people who intend to remain here to invest in good paying property at a price that is sure to be a good paying investment.

A NEW LAW FIRM

To Be Located in Thief River Falls.

Horace Bagley, of State Center, Iowa, and Perl W. Mabey, of Hendricks, Minn., have decided to open up a law office in this city, under the firm name of Bagley & Mabey. They have purchased the law business and good will of Ira C. Richardson and will be located in the latter's office in the future. Mr. Richardson will devote his attention in the future to the postoffice. Both members of the new firm are bright and energetic young men. They are graduates of the law department of the state university and have also had practical experience.

STILL AFTER THEM

State Auditor Dunn is again active in an attempt to secure the restoration to the state of sections 16 and 36 upon the Red Lake and Leech Lake reservations, and his efforts are deserving of success. This was one of the uncompleted missions of Senator Davis, who held firmly to the belief that, notwithstanding the treaty of 1889, the state's right to these lands was paramount under the organic act by which it was created as a territory and state. Senator Davis fought the matter through the various departments, and it reached the supreme court three years ago for final adjudication. The breaking out of the Spanish war and considerations of weightier matters caused him to drop the matter for a time, and it was his intention to take it up this year.

Auditor Dunn is now moving to have Frank B. Kellogg, a law partner of Senator Davis, take up the matter. The lands are diversified, but much of the area is excellent for agricultural purposes, and their value is close to $1,000,000.

THE RIGHT WAY

To Solve the Indian Question in Minnesota.

Bishop J. D. Morrison, who has spent a number of years doing missionary work among the Indians, gives his views on the proposed national park, and also touches upon the best course for the government to pursue in dealing with the Indians. The suggestions are good and practical, and, if they are carried out, the Indians would be better off. Bishop Morrison says:

"We want no such national park, as it is opposed to the best interests of the Indians. I can imagine no more barbarous, cold-blooded proposal than the suggestion to preserve the Ojibways in a national park, as a sort of aboriginal curiosity, to be continually exposed to the vicious influence of a promiscuous company of idle, and often immoral and intemperate, visitors. What decent man could desire to preserve the Indians a squalid mass of idle, ragged mendicants, not permitted to aspire to individual ownership of anything, or the manliness of independence and the eventual dignity of citizenship? What we need is the prompt settlement of all Indian families on locations (White Earth alone is large enough to give to every Indian man, woman and child a farm of 80 acres and thousands of acres for school and hospital and police purposes) and the prompt selling of all the unused land of the reservations that it may be opened for settlement, the purchase money of the land to be funded for the benefit of the Indians.

"Again, we want compulsory education of every Indian boy and girl, and, after one generation, the giving of the franchise and individual ownership of farms to the Indians. After that, let there be no more Indian nonsense, but let him take his chance with the white man. He will do all the better when he knows that he has no pension, no license to run about like a vagabond on a big strip of waste land, and you will have prepared him for the battle of life by giving him compulsory education. The park scheme is of no benefit to the Indian."

A DRAINAGE BILL.

Seventh District Members Will Do More Work.

The legislators from the Seventh congressional district are talking drainage. Senator Myron, of Ada, has a bill prepared, which he will introduce again this session much on the same lines as the bill introduced by him in the senate a year ago. The Seventh district solons expect to caucus on the matter within a short time.—Minneapolis Journal.

THE CITY COUNCIL

Held an Important Meeting Monday Night.

The city council held an important meeting Monday evening at which time much business of importance was transacted.

The resignation of E. E. Zeh as alderman from the Third ward was accepted and A. B. Helgeson was appointed to fill the position.

As the bonds voted last fall in the sum of $4,500 can not be sold, it was decided to hold another election sometime in February, at which time the proposition will be voted upon to issue bonds in the amount of $7,500, the money to be used in paying the debt against the electric light plant, which has cost the city this amount.

The saloon license for the year 1901 was fixed at $750, which is $250 more than was paid in former years. There are at present twelve saloons doing business in this city, and, if they all decide to take out a license again, the city will derive a revenue of $9,000 from this source.

The lot back of the Central school building, which has been used as a pound, was sold to C. M. Weiner for $100, and another location will be secured.

The salary of City Treasurer Wallin was fixed at $200 per year. This has heretofore been a fee office, the treasurer receiving a per cent of the money handled.

A NEW FIRM

Will Soon Be Doing Business Here.

K. M. Hansen and Benjamin Christeanson have formed a partnership and will enter into the general merchandise business in this city in a week or two. The new firm will succeed Mullarky & Hansen, and will do business in the building formerly occupied by that concern. Mr. Hansen has long been in buiness here and is well known. Mr. Christeanson was formerly in business in Wisconsin, and has been a resident of this place since last fall. They will buy the remnant stock of Mullarky & Hansen, and add thereto a large and well assorted stock of merchandise.

If you want to file on a piece of government land it will not be necessary to go to Crookston. Make your filing in Thief River Falls before L. G. Browning, U. S. commissioner for the district of Minnesota.

We have unlimited money to loan on improved farms. Will loan on final receiver's receipt. Interest reasonable. No delays. Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office over First State Bank.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

ATHLETICS IN EUROPE

International Sports at Paris Arouse New Interest.

Effort Will Be Made to Develop Athletes That Can Compete with American Athletes — International Athletic Union Probable.

Albert G. Spalding, director of sports at the Paris exposition, who has just arrived home from Europe, furnished a statement relative to sports at the exhibition and in Europe generally. Mr. Spalding believes the international games in Paris will prove a great incentive to athletics in Europe. The victories of the American athletes aroused so much admiration that there is a desire in Europe to develop athletes who can compete with those of this country.

"In regard to the criticisms of the French people for mismanagement of the games," said Mr. Spalding, "I think it only fair to state that it was not due to any desire to injure our men, but to inexperience in such matters. In their desire to treat all countries equally they may have discriminated against America, as it was certainly very galling to athletes of other nations to see the Americans win first, second and third places in nearly all scratch events, and when the handicaps came along they fixed the handicaps so that some other country would win.

"I traveled extensively through Europe, and I believe that the countries that are to-day backward in track and field sports, rowing, golf and swimming, will in the course of a few years show rapid strides in such sports, and I think nothing will tend to increase the interest more than competitions between this country and those of Europe."

Mr. Spalding heartily favors the formation of an international athletic union which has been proposed. He believes America, which is the leading athletic country of the world should go into the new organization

FLASHES MESSAGES OVER SEA

Test of Wireless Telegraphy Made from a Boat Fifty Miles to Ostend.

The Belgian packet steamer Princess Clementine, while nearing Dover pier the other day, exchanged words with Ostend across nearly 50 miles of sea. Sig. Marconi's wireless telegraphic instrument ticked off messages of congratulation to King Leopold of Belgium, to his minister of railways and to the mail packet department at Brussels.

All this time the Princess Clementine was doing 20 knots an hour in darkness and its passengers were peacefully sleeping in their bunks. The only connection, if it can be called such, between the ship and the shore was a wire hoop at the topmast. It was a demonstration of the perfection of the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy. Replies were received in the same manner.

There will be a preliminary trial by the Belgian officials, which will be really a formal approval of the institution. The land instrument is at La Panne on the Franco-Belgian frontier, 30 miles from Ostend. When the Belgian authorities have formally approved the system it will be adopted on the other Belgian packets also.

PRETTY SINGER WEDS.

Secret Marriage of Ethel Irene Stewart to Millionaire Mine Owner Leaks Out.

It has just leaked out that the stage has lost Ethel Irene Stewart, one of its sweetest and prettiest singers. Even the most intimate friends of the actress were ignorant until now of the fact that Miss Stewart and John L. Elliott, a millionaire mine owner and resident of New York, were married at Holland house. One evening while Miss Stewart was playing at the Victoria Mr. Elliott saw her and fell in love. In time he was formally presented to her, and lost no time in pressing his suit, with the result stated.

Many years ago the young woman's parents, who were wealthy, resided in Los Angeles. Business reverses and the father's death came in course of time. Obliged to support her mother and herself Miss Stewart came to New York and began her stage career under the management of Klaw and Erlanger. Next came her marriage, and with it comfort and affluence.

German Trade Secrets Protected.

A machinist in Berlin was persuaded to enter a shop, as if in need of work, and there learn all about the mode of conducting the business. Having discovered many valuable "points" he communicated them to his real employer. A law in Germany protects trade secrets and the spy was sent to jail and his tricky employer was punished in the same way.

Vegetables are usually sold in piles in Buenos Ayres, so that the purchaser has to measure quantity as well as quality by the eye. The butchers in that city do not sell meat by weight, but at so much per chunk.

SEARCH FOR THE TILE FISH.

Efforts of Government Agents to Locate the Much-Wanted Species.

The United States fish commission is about to make an effort to determine as precisely as possible the area of sea bottom occupied by the tilefish—that strange and interesting finny species which was first discovered in 1879, only to be rendered almost extinct soon afterward by a marine cataclysm wholly unprecedented, says the Saturday Evening Post.

The fish commission thinks that an important and lucrative fishery for the tilefish may be created, when once the fishermen are informed as to where they should go to look for the species, which is excellently adapted for the table. Hitherto it has remained almost unknown simply because its home is in the depths. There is reason to believe that it has again become very numerous, and a reference to the history of the famous catastrophe of 1882 shows that in March and April of that year 7,500 square miles of ocean were found profusely sprinkled with tilefish, the number being estimated at one thousand millions.

The eastern edge of the North American continent is overflowed by the sea, and that is why the water near the coast is so shallow. To find the true edge of the great continental land mass one would have to travel about 80 miles due eastward from New York. There begins a sudden descent to the true floor of the ocean, which is 2½ miles deep. A narrow belt of this declivity, running north and south, is bathed by the warm waters of the Gulf Stream, and here is found the tilefish. The catastrophe above mentioned, which so nearly wiped out the entire species, was undoubtedly due to an invasion of the belt by the arctic current.

FLIRTS WITH WAX WOMEN.

Cattleman from Wyoming Throws Kisses to Figures in Store Windows.

A veracious policeman on a beat that takes in the swell department stores of State street tells a queer story of a cattleman from the plains of Wyoming, says the Chicago Chronicle. According to the officer's story the ranchman fairly fell head and ears in love with one wax figure of a beautiful female in a prominent show window of Chicago's great shopping thoroughfare.

"When I first saw the cowboy throwing kisses at the pretty woman of wax," said the policeman, "I at first thought he must be drunk or crazy. But he was neither. The real truth was that he had never in his life before seen a dummy figure of a woman of the perfect type then standing before him in the glare of the show lights at night, and his explanation was that before he realized the exquisitely attired grand dame was nothing but a cold and lifeless figure he found himself throwing kisses at her in pure gallantry and exuberance of spirit.

"I did not believe him at first, and started to take him in tow as a possibly dangerous lunatic. However, before I reached the patrol box with him I concluded that although he may have been imbibing freely while seeing the town, he was in no way affected in his upper story. So I turned him loose, with a warning that he would frighten people badly and get locked up should he renew his ardent and demonstrative wooing of the wax figures in State street windows."

A TELEGRAPH LINE.

In Chili That Was Preserved from Molestation of Indians by a Clever Trick.

When the electric telegraph was first introduced into Chili a stratagem was resorted to in order to guard the posts and wires against damage on the part of the natives and to maintain the connection between the strongholds on the frontier. There were at the time between 40 and 50 captive Indians in the Chilian camp. Gen. Pinto—in command of the operations—called them together, and, pointing to the telegraph wires, said:

"Do you see those wires?"

"Yes, general."

"I want you to remember not to go near or touch them, for if you do your hands will be held, and you will be unable to get away."

The Indians smiled incredulously. Then the general made them each in succession take hold of the wire at both ends of an electric battery in full operation, after which he exclaimed:

"I command you to let go the wire!"

"I can't; my hands are benumbed!" cried each Indian.

The battery was then stopped. Not long after the general restored them to liberty, giving them strict instructions to keep the secret. This had the desired effect, for, as might be expected, the experience was related in the strictest confidence to every man in the tribe, and the telegraph has ever since remained unmolested.

Costly Gunnery.

A Rhode Island hunter has been fined $25 for shooting a robin. One swallow doesn't make a summer, remarks the Chicago Times-Herald, but in this case it is probable that one robin made a sinner.

NO HOLLERING IN BROOKLYN.

A Manhattan Lawyer's Experience with a Deaf Client Across the Big Bridge.

"One of my clients is deaf," said a downtown lawyer, according to the New York Sun, "and thereby hangs a story of my trouble with a policeman in Brooklyn. My client sent one day for me to see him on business in his house over the bridge, and I was detained until a late hour. When I left he thought it would be in conformity with a Brooklyn custom to see me to my car. It was a crisp night, and we stood on the corner. I was doing the talking. He did his share, but it was not noticeable. The stillness of the hour made my loud tones sound like a megaphone in action.

"The cop on the beat came around the corner and said we must move along. Naturally I resented this. I said I had the privilege of talking to my client in the street if I wanted to. The cop said it was no time or place to be talking business, especially when such talk disturbed the peace. He said if I wanted to talk I needn't, as he expressed it, holler as if I was trying to hail a steamboat. It then occurred to me that I had been yelling along the quiet thoroughfare of the church city. I explained to the cop that my client was as deaf as a cigar store Indian, but the cop said that was no excuse, and I could do nothing but obey his order.

"'Don't let me hear you hollerin' any more on this side of the river,' said the cop, as I moved on."

SAVED HER HUSBAND'S LIFE.

Count Ito, late prime minister of Japan, is exceedingly proud of his pretty little wife, and well he may be, for not only is she in every way charming, but to her he owes his life. It is said that a number of years ago, when quite a young woman, during a rebellion, Count Ito was hiding from his enemies, who, having tracked him to his home, sent a band of "soshis" to assassinate him. On hearing his enemies approaching, and trapped like a rat in its hole, the count drew his sword, and prepared to die, but the countess whispered: "Do not die; there is hope still," and, removing the "hibatchi," or fire box, and lifting up the mats and the planks beneath, she induced her husband to conceal himself in the hollow space which exists under the floor of all Japanese houses. The murderers broke into the room just as the fire box had been replaced and demanded of the countess their victim. In vain they threatened and cruelly ill treated her, dragging her about the room by her long black hair. But it was of no avail; they could not shake her resolute fidelity. Thanks to her courage, Count Ito escaped, and has lived to give to his country a new constitution and become one of the greatest statesmen of modern Japan.

WHY MANY HEELS ARE LOST.

Modern Machine Pegging on Shoes Is Not at All Conducive to Long Wear.

"Have you noticed," asked the observant man, according to the New York Times, "how often one sees the portions of shoe heels scattered about at the elevated road stations and other places where a lift might easily be torn off? I wonder what the reason is. In the old days the heels of one's shoes were the part that clung to the uppers most closely. You newspaper fellows are supposed to know everything. Just answer that conundrum." The writer could not, but a shoe dealer could, and did. "The reason," said he, "is because in these days of machine-made shoes the heels are fastened on by machinery, as is every other part of the shoe. Soft iron is used for the nails instead of steel, as this is handled more easily. When the lifts of the heels have been fastened in place the nails protrude. The shoes are then sent to another machine, where they are shaved off instead of being driven home, as in the days when the work was done by hand. The result is that they are insecurely fastened, and if one catches the heel of his shoe against a stair so that there is the least strain on it it gives way and pulls off. The moral is to have a set of steel nails driven into the heels when you buy a new pair of shoes."

A REAL BUSINESS WOMAN.

Miss Balfour Carefully Manages Her Busy Brother's Estate and Household.

Miss Balfour, the sister of Arthur J. Balfour, government leader in the house of commons, is noted for her devotion to her brother's interests, and she manages most of his affairs, so as to leave him entirely free for his political work. She not alone superintends the household in the conventional way, but looks after outside details which are usually left to the supervision and direction of the master of the house, says a London paper. Mr. Balfour is never bothered when the chimney needs attention, the roof retiling or any other matter of this kind. Miss Balfour attends to defects and gives the order herself. She also buys the horses and carriages, and is said to be well qualified for the work and a good judge of both horses and carriages. Recently she had a special brougham made for her brother's use, attending to the details herself. As an instance of her care and interest, it is said that if there is a possibility of her brother needing a conveyance and she desires to take a drive, the best carriage and the first coachman will be left for Mr. Balfour and she will take the second carriage and second coachman.

HARD WINTER IS COMING.

Experienced Woodsmen See Certain Indications of an Unusually Severe Season.

"All the signs in the woods," explained an experienced woodsman to a Washington Star reporter, "point to a very severe winter, though it may be a short one. The squirrels have already begun laying away their winter store of nuts, though in the immediate country around Washington the nuts have not begun to fall to any great extent. The crop of acorns, hickory and chestnuts is unusually large this fall, some trees that have come under my observation bearing at least double the quantity they did last year. This is a very reliable sign of a severe winter.

"Another sign is the crop of persimmons, which is also extra heavy. The few frosts that we have had have not done much to ripen the persimmon and many of them are yet green. My observation convinces me that these signs are entitled to some dependence, though, of course, they are not recognized as infallible by the authorities on the subject. I think I have satisfied my own mind on the bearing the persimmon has on the weather that is to follow and that this is incontrovertible: If the persimmon ripens and falls early the winter will be brief, but if it holds on to the tree late into the fall the winter is very liable to be late in its wind-up and severe while it prevails. The animals are preparing for a cold winter, and there are some reasons for believing that they know what they are about."

Uses of Burlap.

An enormous and increasing amount of burlap is used in this country, 500,000,000 yards a year, it is said. Burlap is used for making bags, it figures in coat linings, and is even entering, in a dressed-up state, into wall coverings. But it is chiefly used for packing and wrapping, and with our increasing export trade great quantities of it are demanded.

Women as Supplementary Curates.

One of the Liverpool clergy of the Established Church of England is trying to employ church women as regular supplementary curates, and he suggests that much organizing work of the parish might be better done by women than by clergymen. He declares that he can get three women to work for the price of one curate and to do three times the work.

WHY LOWRY?

The candidacy of Mr. Lowry, of Minneapolis, presents some peculiar features. It is generally admitted that he is a most genial man, with exceptionally good business ability, and who has been successful to a wonderful degree. It is also admitted that, if elected, he would be a senator of influence, and his loyalty to Minnesota is unquestioned. This much should be said in fairness to Mr. Lowry.

As a candidate for the highest office in the gift of the people of the state, he is properly subject to the same consideration as the other candidates, no more, no less. So far as the public has been advised, there are not to exceed ten senators and representatives who favor him. He has the smallest number of supporters of any of the candidates. Tawney has over twice as many, Clapp three times as many, and Evans four times as many as has Lowry. Yet it is freely predicted that Lowry will be elected. Why? Simply because he is a rich man. This is a reflection upon the legislators and upon Mr. Lowry.

Under the circumstances, we cannot believe that he can be elected. We are not ready to believe that the Republican members care to throw this load upon the party—or that they are willing to put themselves in a position where their own integrity can be questioned. Even if a majority should vote for Lowry, believing him to be the best man for the place, and from no personal consideration, the people of Minnesota would think that his riches were the potential influence. Mr. Lowry could not afford to take the office under such a condition, and the Republican party would suffer by his election, to say nothing of the condemnation that will be visited upon the men who vote for him. He is supported by only three or four of the members from his own city, and can hardly be called a Minneapolis candidate when Evans has the suppor of three-fourths of the Minneapolis delegates. Outside of Minneapolis there is no call for his election. The people demand the election of either Evans or Clapp.—St. Cloud Journal-Press.

OUR EXPORTS.

The invasion of foreign markets by American exports, which was such a marked feature in the commercial record of the year 1899, has been carried on with increasing vigor during the past twelve months. Gratifying as was the total volume of our export trade for that year, it has increased no less than 28 per cent during the last twelve months, the value of the total exports of manufactured articles for 1900 being $433,851,756. A comparison of the beginning with the end of the century shows that whereas imports for home consumption into the United States for the year 1800 were $52,131,891, at the close of the century they have grown to $685,441,892, an increase of 1,215 per cent, while the total exports have risen from $31,840,903 to $1,293,931,222, an increase of 3,681 per cent. An examination of the details of our exports of manufactures shows that it is in manufacturing metals that we are chiefly distinguished. The history of nations proves that groups of people frequently excel greatly in certain specified industries, and the growth of our exportation, as well as of our domestic production of manufactures, seems to point to the fabrication of metals as being our most successful line of work, especially at the present time. In 1889, manufactures of metals formed less than 20 per cent of our total exports of manufactures, whereas in 1900 it is nearly 50 per cent. A most interesting fact developed by an examination of our export figures is that the European countries, in which manufactures have long been established, furnish as satisfactory a market for our manufactured goods as do the countries where manufacture has not yet been largely developed. — Scientific American.

MINNESOTA is to have two additional congressmen, making a total of nine, and it will be the duty of the present state legislature to form the boundaries of the new districts. The counties in the northern portion of the Red river valley will undoubtedly form one of the districts, and Crookston will be about in the center of it.

R. G. EVANS is conducting an honorable and upright campaign for the office of senator, and should have the hearty support of all who believe in fair play.

IF Tom Lowry is elected senator, the demand to have senators elected by the people will be greater than ever.

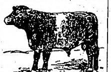
SCRUBS ARE COSTLY.

THERE IS NO MONEY IN INFERIOR LIVE STOCK.

Lessons Which Farmers Are Slow to Learn—Well Bred Animals Are Necessities and Not Luxuries Where Profits Are Wanted.

One of the unsolved mysteries in connection with American agriculture is the amazing indifference displayed by such a large proportion of even the better class of farmers in the matter of the quality of their live stock, says The Breeder's Gazette. In spite of the daily lessons of the market place there is widespread failure to apply them in actual practice. Many do not patronize improved sires of any sort. Others choose unwisely and are disappointed. Still another class destroy progress already made by resorting to an injudicious cross, such as breeding a cow of a beef breed to a dairy bred bull or stinting a draft mare to a coach or trotting bred stallion.

There is no room on any properly managed farm for inferior live stock. It pays no profit and involves a useless waste of animal foods. Too many farmers have the erroneous idea that the well bred animal is a luxury that can only be afforded by the rich. It is true that the training of pure bred stock for show involves a more or less elaborate equipment and compels the expenditure of much money. It is also true that many men of large means engage in blood stock breeding upon an extravagant basis.



SHORTHORN BULL CALF.

The fact remains nevertheless that the average farmer can handle well bred live stock at a relatively greater profit than the so called "professionals" and is blind to his own best interest if he neglects to maintain some suitable variety as a leading feature of his farming operations. These truisms have been reiterated in these columns so often that it may seem idle to repeat them here. At the same time the point is one of such supreme importance that it cannot too often be discussed.

Animals of good form and quality are always salable, and there is no farmer, however moderate his means, but can improve the type of his cattle, his sheep, his hogs or his horses in one generation by resorting to the use of a pure bred male. Females can be sent for service to some good sire in the neighborhood if it is not deemed expedient to buy one. Where there is a wish to improve a way can always be found to make a beginning. The desire to rear good stock instead of "scrubs" must first exist. The means of attaining that end will readily present themselves if honestly sought.

It is all well enough, for example, to ship in feeding cattle from a distance, but why may not the farmers of the corn and blue grass belt carry good herds of cows and rear a still better grade of calves than can usually be bought on the range or in central markets? Buyers are scouring the country for good young steers and cannot find them. Why do not farmers breed to fill this steady demand? It will commonly pay any careful farmer to buy a few registered cows or heifers and breed them to pedigreed bulls of the same type. One does not need to wait until able to purchase a large lot. One or two good pure bred heifers properly handled will soon grow into money. And so with sheep or any other variety of the domestic animals. Few farmers are rich enough to afford the luxury of "scrubs." They should not be tolerated on any land that grows good crops.

Unprofitable Stock.

It is one thing to keep an old animal that has been the pride and pet of the family for years after it has ceased to be profitable, and another to keep one that is not and never was able to earn its keeping. Yet while not many farmers feel able to do the former for sentiment's sake there are hundreds who are doing the latter from no other reason than an unpardonable ignorance as to the cost of keeping and the actual results received from the animal. The Babcock test is doing much to weed out some of the unprofitable cows when used in connection with the regular weighing of the milk, but other animals need to be looked after. Sheep need to be culled carefully every year, and those that do not produce and bring up good lambs and a good shearing of wool should be fitted for mutton. There is many a man who keeps a horse when he could hire one to do the work he has for him at less than the cost of feeding and others who keep two, though one could do the work excepting during a few days in the year. Weed out the unprofitable animals even if obliged to kill and bury them. They may do the world some good in that way.—American Cultivator.

Overripe Meat.

The London Rural World answers a question, "What can be done with meat kept a little too long, but not unfit for food?" and suggests washing, vinegar, borax, permanganate of potash and charcoal applied in various ways. We have always held that meat "kept a little too long" is not fit for human food and that it ought to be taken out and buried.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

TIME AND SPACE are practically annihilated by the ocean cables and land telegraph systems which now belt the circumference of Old Earth in so many different directions. "Foreign parts" are no longer foreign in the old meaning of the term. Europe, Africa, Asia, are "next door" to us. What happens there to-day we know to-morrow—if we read THE CHICAGO RECORD, whose Special Cable Correspondents are located in every important city in the world outside of the United States. No other American newspaper ever attempted so extensive a service; and it is supplemented by the regular foreign news service of The Associated Press. For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

FREE A large map of the world on Mercator's Projection, about 22½x16 inches in size, beautifully printed in colors, with a large-scale map of Europe on the reverse side, will be mailed to any address free of charge on receipt of request accompanied by two 2-cent stamps to cover postage and wrapping. ELECTRIC LIGHTS

NOW LIGHT THE STREETS OF THIEF RIVER FALLS.

The electric light plant was started up last week, and the lights furnished by the city are giving general satisfaction. The lights add greatly to the appearance of the streets at night and give the city the appearance of a metropolis.

As the citizens will soon vote upon the proposition of issuing bonds, and this will practically settle the question of whether the plant is to be owned by a pritate corporation or continue to be operated by the city, it may be well to give a few facts concerning the same. There are at present about 500 lights in use by private parties, and the average price paid is about 40 cents per light per month, making the total revenues received $200 per month, and this will be increased, as there are numerous others desirous of putting in electric lights. The cost of running the plant is $165 per month—$75 paid for superintendent's salary, $40 for helper and $50 for power. Thus it will be seen that the city will not only be getting the services of twelve arc lights free each month, which are worth about $100, but will be receiving an income of $35 per month from the plant.

THE MASONS

WILL HAVE A BIG TIME SATURDAY, JAN. 26.

The local Masonic lodge, which has been working under dispensation during the past three months, has sent its records, etc., to St. Paul, where the Grand Lodge is now in session, and, after the work has been received, a charter will be issued.

It is expected that the charter will be here in time to hold a meeting Saturday, Jan. 26, at which time there will be present about fifty Masons from Crookston, who will come up in a special train, and assist in the initiation of six candidates in the third degree, after which a banquet will be served by the local lodge.

OUR WANTS.

THEY ARE DISCUSSED AT A JOINT CAUCUS OF REPUBLICANS.

The Republican senators and representatives of the Seventh district held a caucus last week. Senator Grindeland was chosen chairman and Albert Berg secretary. It was decided to ask again for a $100,000 appropriation for the drainage of state lands in the Red river valley and elsewhere. A bill will be drafted by the chairman and a committee of two others to be appointed by him. The members from the Red river valley are also going to try to get lower freight and express charges, and a committee of four to devise ways and means will be appointed by the chairman. The senatorial fight was not mentioned.

COMMUTATION

MR. EDDY REPORTS THE PROMISED BILL FROM HIS COMMITTEE.

Congressman Eddy moved in a practical manner last week in the matter of fulfilling a promise to his constituents in northern Minnesota, and at the same time benefitting a large number of homesteaders in other states by reporting from the house committee on public lands a bill allowing homestead settlers to commute their entries. It extends the provisions of the present law to homesteaders who have taken claims under the provisions of the free homes bill.

Palaces on Wheels.

WYLIE'S FIRE LOSS

SMIDESANG'S GENERAL STORE IS NOW A PILE OF ASHES.

Wylie had a touch of excitement last Friday, due to the burning of the leading general store of the place, which was the property of P. E. Smidesang.

The fire broke out at 8 o'clock in the morning, soon after the clerk warmed up the stove for the day, and was due to a defective flue.

The people turned out and saved most of the stock, but the building was burned to the ground, the village being too small to have any organization of fire fighters.

Mr. Smidesang will resume business at once. He carried some insurance that will enable him to weather the loss in good shape, and he will rebuild as soon as possible.

M. W. A. INCREASE.

A BIG STRIDE MADE DURING THE PAST YEAR.

From January 1st to December 1st, 1900, the certificate department of the Modern Woodmen society issued 131,240 benefit certificates, as against 122,344 last year during the same period. From January 1st to December 1st, 1900, the head office issued charters to 1,655 new camps, as against 1,505 during the same period last year. The gain made was greater than that made by any other fraternal society doing business in the United States. The total disbursements from the benefit fund from the date of the society's organization, January 5, 1883, to December 20, 1900, are reported to have been $19,335,249.30. Over 9,000 death claims have been paid by the society.

THE CONDITIONS

FAVORABLE IN MEXICO FOR A MAN WITH MONEY.

P. Meehan arrived in the city last Thursday to attend to some business matters and renew his acquaintance. Since leaving this city, Mr. Meehan has been traveling most of the time. He has been in Alaska, old Mexico and at different places in the southwestern part of the United States. He is very favorably impressed with the climate and conditions in Mexico, but does not like the inhabitants of that country very well. They are mostly mixed Spanish and Indian, and are a deceptive and treacherous lot of people. Mr. Meehan bought a large tract of pine land in Mexico, but did not buy it with a view of going into the lumbering business again, but merely for an investment, and as a person is not required to pay taxes upon land that is not cultivated in that country, he can hold it for an indefinite period without being put to any expense. Land is very cheap there, and good land suitable for agricultural purposes can be purchased for 12½ cents an acre. All kinds of labor down there is very cheap, and the going wages paid to common laborers is 12 cents a day, a laboring man in that country being capable of living on 6 cents a day. In the mines, Mr. Meehan states, expert miners receive but 50 cents, and they are fully as capable as men in Colorado, who receive $3.50 per day for the same work. In the city of Mexico there are fully 5,000 people who are without homes, and they sleep upon the side walks and in the streets nights. Mr. Meehan expects to go down to Mexico again in about a month.

A GOOD BUSINESS

BEING TRANSACTED BY THE REAL ESTATE DEALERS.

Our real estate men are all enjoying a new experience this winter that is as mysterious in its cause as it is pleasing in its effect. Never before has there been such a movement in land during the winter months as there has been this year. In fact, as a rule, business in that line is suspended from the time it freezes in the fall till the return of warm weather. The fact that no great amount of snow has fallen as yet is very fortunate, as prospective buyers can see the quality of the land they examine.

Couldn't Blow It Out.

A well known resident of St. Hilaire arrived in the city last evening and registered at the Commercial hotel. The night clerk showed him to his room shortly after ten o'clock, and, turning on the electric light for the stranger, returned to the office. Imagine his surprise when, shortly after twelve, the St. Hilaire man appeared, half dressed, at the top of the stairs, calling for the night clerk to come to his room and "blow out the darned light," as he couldn't think of going to bed with it burning, and he had exhausted all his superfluous blowing powers for nearly two hours. Of course, the accommodating night clerk complied with the request, thinking to himself, however, that such a big fellow, who appeared to be rather of more than ordinary intelligence, ought to know enough to turn out an electric light glim, even if he lived in St. Hilaire.—Crookston Journal.

Presiding Elder Dodds will be here to hold the second quarterly conference of the M. E. church Friday, Jan. 25th. He will preach in the evening, and also on the following Sunday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these services.

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

PLAN TO AID FARMERS.

Rare Economic Plants and Seed For Our Agriculturists.

VALUABLE GIFT OF A CHICAGO MAN

Personally Collected in Many Foreign Lands by Barbour Lathrop. Thousands of Dollars Spent on the Expedition—Department of Agriculture to Distribute the Collection.

One of the most remarkable collections of rare economic plants and seeds is now being worked up by the department of agriculture, says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times-Herald. Barbour Lathrop of Chicago, with David G. Fairchild as assistant, recently completed a tour of the world covering a period of two years and embracing travels which amounted to explorations. Mr. Lathrop has given the results of the expedition, undertaken at his own expense, to the farmers of the United States through the medium of the section of seed and plant introduction of the department of agriculture.

The expedition left New York Dec. 31, 1898, and returned last fall, having visited in order the following countries and sent in from each living economic plants and seeds for cultivation by American farmers and horticulturists: Jamaica, Grenada, Barbados, Trinidad, in the West Indies; Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Brazil, in South America; Portugal; Tyrol and Bohemia, in Austria-Hungary; Italy, Egypt, Ceylon and Straits Settlements, in farther India; Java, Celebes, Amboina, Banda, Lombok, Bali, Moluccas, Aru and Kei islands, Tenimber archipelago and New Guinea, in the Dutch East Indies; Hongkong, Canton, in south China; the Philippine Islands, Bangkok, Siam; Sweden and Finland, in northern Europe.

Many thousands of dollars have been spent by Mr. Lathrop upon this expedition, and he put into it some of the best thoughts of a practical man who is alive to the general wants of his countrymen. He is not an agriculturist and intrusted the technical part of the work to his assistant, Mr. Fairchild, who was detailed by Secretary Wilson from his position in charge of the section of seed and plant introduction.

The trip was primarily planned by Mr. Lathrop to be one of reconnoissance. The object in the first place was to find out what each country offered in inducements for exploration work, how it should be entered and studied, whom of its inhabitants could be relied upon as correspondents and what would be the probable expense of an exhaustive study from the standpoint of plant introduction. This object has been attained and is imbedded in a mass of notes and piles of publications and notebooks, etc.

The secondary aim of the expedition was to purchase and import for trial such promising seeds and plants as were suited for culture in various parts of the United States. The material thus purchased has not all come in yet, but the main part has been distributed or will shortly be sent out by the department to the various experiment stations and private experimenters for trial and report.

Over 450 different purchases were sent in from the various countries, each purchase accompanied by careful notes on its culture and the climatic soil conditions to which the plant or seed was best adapted. The annotated list has been in part published or is in process of publication by the section of seed and plant introduction and covers a wide range of horticultural and agricultural plants suited to a variety of conditions from the tropical surroundings of Porto Rico and Hawaii to the arctic climate of Alaska. It will be of interest to point out some of the prospects of these introduced plants and the reasons for their trial:

A series of West Indian yams, one of which at least is superior in flavor to the Irish potato; suitable for culture in Florida and Louisiana, but demanding special care and a special market.

Varieties of "pedigreed" barleys, originated in Sweden and of superior value for brewing purposes.

A frost hardy alligator pear, for the coming industry of this fruit growing in Florida and California.

The Lapland six rowed barley and the early ripening Finnish black oat for experiments in Alaska and short season regions.

Chilean alfalfa varieties for breeding experiments.

Several novel Swedish leguminous (cloverlike) fodder plants, lately brought to the notice of the agricultural public of Sweden.

The "Jannovitch" Egyptian cotton, which is now being tested by over 1,000 experimenters in the upland cotton regions of the south and regarding which many encouraging reports have been received. It is a stronger grower and has much longer staple than any American upland cotton. It also has proved resistant to "root rot" of cotton to a very great degree, which will make its culture possible on lands previously totally unfitted for cotton growing.

The "Algarobillo," a tannin producing shrub from the Chilean deserts, with most remarkable desert resisting characteristics and large tannin producing capacity, for Arizona conditions.

A fodder bamboo for the arid regions of the southwest, which forms in south Chile one of the principal sources of fodder for large herds of cattle.

The seedless Sultanina grape from Padua, Italy, for the seedless raisin industry of the Colorado desert region.

Of course the value of most of the arborescent plants can only be decided after several years of culture and the fate of many of the annuals only after numerous repeated trials. Enough has been cited to show the American farmers what has been accomplished by private means and in how great a measure their thanks are due to a true American.

The great results likely to come from Mr. Lathrop's explorations will be due to his wisdom in associating with him expert botanists and scientists and securing the most complete data and information concerning the new and strange plants secured, relating to their habits of growth and the character of their natural surroundings, thus enabling the department of agriculture to intelligently experiment with them. There is in the broad area of the United States somewhere a spot which is a counterpart of almost every region of the eastern hemisphere, but it is a work of great magnitude to fit the plants of the older country to their congenial spots on this hemisphere.

OUTLOOK FOR TELEGRAPHY.

Interesting Changes Predicted For the Twentieth Century.

The state of the art of electrical communication today may be summed up as follows:

	Words a minute.
Telephony	60
Single Morse circuits	15
Duplex Morse circuits	30
Quadruplex Morse circuits	50
Multiplex (six circuits)	80
Wheatstone automatic	125
Wheatstone automatic duplex	200
Wireless	10

Undoubtedly before the new century is ten years old at least one-half of the correspondence now carried by train will be telegraphed at an average rate for the whole country of 15 cents for 50 words, or five times as many words for one-half the present telegraph toll, says Patrick B. Delaney in The Electrical World and Engineer. It is practicable to begin this change at once, but not by present methods of operation. It is only possible by the chemical automatic system.

What the centenarian of 100 years hence may see a prophet should leave to his son to prophesy. In the way of telegraphy doubtless the ships amain will hold converse with each other and correct their chronometers with the last observation 100 miles away. They will be in constant communication with the shore through the air or by wires on the bed of the ocean, but as the trip from the Hook to the Lizard will be done in a day and probably without touching the water only the overanxious will want a dispatch. Communication with Mars has already been pre-empted, and seeing by electricity may be no longer visionary. Forsooth our seven senses may all be "wired" wirelessly.

AUTOMOBILE ENDURANCE.

Test to Be Made Between New York and Buffalo.

It was decided at a meeting of the technical and contest committee of the Automobile Club of America held in New York city the other day to have an endurance test of automobiles between New York and Buffalo, says the New York Post. The committee decided not to take speed into consideration, but to compute awards upon: First, vehicles making the fewest stops en route; second, vehicles carrying the greatest weight in passengers in proportion to their own weight, and third, vehicles requiring least repairs if any and maintaining an average speed of from 12 to 15 miles an hour.

The route will be through Tarrytown, Peekskill, Poughkeepsie, Albany, Utica, Syracuse and Rochester, and officials will be stationed at villages along the road at an average distance of about 25 miles apart. The competition will be open to all motor vehicles carrying two persons side by side on one seat, which bars out motor bicycles, tricycles and quadricycles. There will be two classes, one for manufacturers and the other for individual owners, the entry fee to the first being $100. A prize fund of $2,500 has been established, and its method of distribution has not yet been decided upon. The date has not been set, and the contest may not be held until next fall.

CORNER IN CHINCHILLA.

How an American Engineered One In Bolivia.

EXPERIENCES WITH INDIANS.

In Times of Peace Natives Are Good Christians, but Cannibals In Wartimes—Curse of the Country Is Potato Whisky—How Chinchillas Are Trapped.

George B. Herzig, who for several months has been trading with the Imcha and Amana Indians of the Andes, who spend the best part of their lives in trapping the chinchilla, a little rodent whose pearly gray fur forms one of the most expensive as well as desirable skins, returned to New York on the steamship Niagara the other day. Mr. Herzig practically secured a corner on the entire available supply of the skins in the Bolivian Andes. Known probably to more members of the Imcha and Amana tribes than any other living white man, he has managed during his extended tour to meet nearly all of his semisavage acquaintances, with the result that the title to practically all the chinchilla skins in the Bolivian Andes is now at his disposal.

Dressed in the garb indicative of the country in which the chinchilla flourishes, accompanied by a retinue of native guides and amigos (friends), he went from end to end of the Bolivian sections of the range, gathering in the skins, to the total of 15,000 dozen, representing an outlay of about 800,000 pesos, or $420,000 in American money. Not only did Mr. Herzig accomplish all that he could desire in the acquirement of the furs, but he managed also to witness and hear about a lot of things that in many cases he would rather have remained ignorant of. The Indians in times of peace or when there is a dearth of potato alcohol are friendly to the stranger, but on other occasions the effect of too much of the potato compound turns them not only into the most relentless foes, but into cannibals as well. A young American engineer named MacDonald on one occasion, Mr. Herzig says, was slaughtered and eaten by them during one of their savage orgies.

Mr. Herzig, in speaking of his trip to a reporter of the New York Times and the incidents that he either witnessed or were told to him by native friends, said:

"I left New York on Feb. 7 last, going to Colon, where I crossed the isthmus, re-embarked on a Pacific steamship and sailed down the coast to Bolivia, where I took a coach—there being no such thing as a railroad in all Bolivia—finally arriving at the foot of the Andes, where my tour of the country commenced. In all, my travels covered in the neighborhood of 10,000 miles, beginning at La Paz and extending as far as the Punta Renas, in the strait of Magellan. I was in search of chinchilla furs, which are secured from the Indians of the Andes. The chinchilla is a little animal that looks something like a squirrel and also like a rabbit. It is trapped at an elevation of from 6,000 to 10,000 feet by the Imchas and Amanas, who trade in the furs.

"Formerly the animals were smoked or ferreted out of their holes and in some cases caught with dogs. This was very injurious to the skins, however, and they are now generally trapped in the nighttime by the Indians. They are very wild, and a considerable amount of skill is necessary in capturing them. Each tribe puts its stock at the disposal of its chief, who sells the skins. I have known one tribe to accumulate as high as $80,000 worth of the skins at one time and dispose of them at one sale, dividing the money acquired among the tribesmen.

"You ask me if I have ever experienced any trouble with the natives. I have been very fortunate as a general rule with them, for if you treat them right they will in most cases reciprocate and treat you likewise. When I was in La Paz, a revolution was in progress. There was considerable fighting going on in the vicinity of the town, and I experienced some difficulty in getting out of the place. The secretary of the American legation, Mr. Valles, finally came to my rescue, however, and succeeded in getting me passed through the lines, threatening that unless they permitted my free egress an American fleet would bombard the seacoast towns. This struck me as a rather original proposition, since Bolivia has no coast line at all. The threat worked all right, however, and I was more than satisfied with the outcome of the bluff.

"At another time I was present at, or rather in the vicinity of, a great national religious festival in an old church in the Andes. The Indians, you know, are very religious and have original ways of showing it. At this festival they came from Brazil, Argentina and Bolivia. In front of the church for about 100 yards extended a stone pathway. The stones were small in size and very pointed, making walking on them very laborious, and when I tell you that each Indian had to get on his hands and knees and crawl all the way to the church you can appreciate the feryid fanaticism that marks their devotion. On this occasion the stones of the walk were covered with blood. After they reached the church there was another celebration, in which weird dances predominated. While they are supposed to be good Christians in peaceful times, they are, on the other hand, cannibals in times of war. Several cases where human beings have been butchered and then eaten have been brought to my notice. They will torture an enemy by pulling out his toe nails, gouging out his eyes or removing bones from his jaw, besides performing other barbarous tortures beyond the power of man to describe. It is absolutely necessary, you see, to treat them right, especially if you have any longing to see your native land again.

"On another occasion," said Mr. Herzig, "I attended one of the native fairs, held on the Argentina boundary. Huara was the name of the village where the show took place. It is normally a place of about 500 inhabitants, but on this occasion the visitors swelled the total to more than 10,000. Trading in mules was the principal diversion of the pleasure seekers, who would pick out an animal and then pay a gaucho, or cowboy, a dollar to break him, which he would do in five minutes' time. He would throw, saddle and bridle him as the American cowboy does, except that a Mexican bit would be used, the torture of which would require only a few minutes in which to subdue the beast.

"The great curse of the country is the potato alcohol, which, though it is a government monopoly, is nevertheless, despite all attempts to stop its sale to the Indians, always on hand. Give him this fiery liquor, and there is no telling what he will do."

Mr. Herzig brought back with him three live chinchillas, which are the first of the little animals to be brought to the United States. He gave them to the Central park zoo.

How to Make Orange Honey.

Mix together the juice of three oranges and the grated rind of one, a small cupful of sugar, a tablespoonful of butter and the well beaten yolks of two eggs. Cook over a slow fire, stirring constantly, until about as thick as honey. Serve cold. This is excellent with fritters, all kinds of warm bread and griddlecakes.

How to Make Crullers.

Two teacups of sugar, one cup of milk, one-half cup of butter, juice of one orange, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, one of soda and two eggs beaten separately. Mix with sufficient flour (previously well sifted) to roll out. Fry in boiling lard, and when cold roll in powdered sugar.

How to Darn Fine Goods.

Fine, loosely twisted silk, the kind used for knitting, is the best for darning fine woolen garments. The threads should not be drawn tight, nor should they fill the hole as closely as in ordinary darning.

How to Make Baking Powder.

One pound bicarbonate of soda, one pound cream tartar, six ounces tartaric acid, one pint of flour. Mix well and sift six times. Use one teaspoonful to one quart of flour.

REDUCED PRICES.

Before laying in a new line of goods for the spring, I will sell goods at very low prices, in order to clean up my present stock. Now is your opportunity to buy goods at prices never before heard of in this part of the country. It costs nothing to examine my goods. Come in and I will convince you that I can sell clothing, caps, shoes, underwear and gents' furnishings cheaper than any store in this town or surrounding towns.

CLAPP WON.

Gen. Clapp, the "Black Eagle of Minnesota," has been named by the Republicans as the successor to Senator Davis. The selection will give general satisfaction throughout the state, the real cause for rejoicing being the fact that Tom Lowry did not succeed in buying the senatorship. R. G. Evans made a manly fight, and would probably have won had he not been shamefully betrayed by Minneapolis people.

Moses E. Clapp was born in Delphi, Ind., May 25, 1851. His parents removed to Hudson, Wis., in 1857. After receiving a good common school education, he studied law, and graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1878. He entered upon the practice of law at Hudson, Wis., and was quite successful. He was elected county attorney for St. Croix county in 1879. He removed to Fergus Falls, Minn., in 1881, and was city attorney during 1883, 1884 and 1885. He was nominated for attorney general by the Republican convention in September, 1885, defeating W. S. Patee, now dean of the law department of the University of Minnesota, and Frank B. Kellogg, of the late firm of Davis, Kellogg & Severance. He was elected by a complimentary majority, and, being renominated, served as attorney general three terms. In 1892 he moved to St. Paul, where he has since resided. In 1896 he was a candidate for nomination for governor. While he was defeated, the contest demonstrated that he was one of the ablest men of the state. He is a good lawyer, and well informed upon all leading questions, a forcible speaker, is a fine orator and, with a good personal appearance, commands an audience when he speaks. He is dignified, yet congenial and accessible to all, and, as a result, very popular. He is married and has three children.

At a meeting of the National Live Stock association, held at Salt Lake City, L. G. Powers, chief statistician of the agriculture department at the census office, Washington, D. C., spoke about "Our National Wealth in Live Stock." He said: "The cow, the steer and the humble pig are playing their part quite as effectively as the horse and mule in the struggle of America for the industrial supremacy of the world. Our cattle and swine give our people, in the aggregate, a tremendous importance and power. The American hog, by furnishing cheap meat to the workers of Europe, is undermining the power of all the old vested interests of the nations on that continent, and in time will be a factor for toppling over even the throne of kings and the power of aristocracy. The Americans are masters of the situation, and our live stock interests, more than our steam engines and water wheels, occupy the highest seat of power. The situation is full of encouragement for the American people at the opening of the Twentieth century."

The present legislature will very likely take some steps to secure the adoption of voting machines at elections. This will be another step in ballot reform, and those who have watched the physical exhaustion of judge and clerks of election as they finished the count of ballots at three or four o'clock in the morning know that it is a desirable improvement. The voting machine will give us prompt and accurate election returns.—Warren Sheaf.

CHAT WITH A BOER OFFICER.

Commandant Jan Krige Tells of Treatment of British Prisoners.

Commandant Jan Krige, a Boer fighting man just from the ranks in the Transvaal who recently gave a free lecture in Washington, is a born South African farmer and has been in the field for nearly a year. Having lost his horse, he, with many others, was sent to Lourenco Marques by General Botha till he could be again mounted. The Portuguese prevented his return to the field, and he escaped on a German ship. He speaks English with facility and is now presenting the cause of the Boers to the people of the United States. He made his first platform appearance the other evening.

The commandant said to a representative of the Washington Star in reply to questions:

"Judging from reports received only through English sources, the Boers have great cause to congratulate themselves and to expect eventual victory. We do not expect to drive the British into the sea, but we do expect to enjoy the re-establishment of our republics and the reoccupation of our homes. At present our families are scattered far and wide, thousands having been driven from their homes and left to wander in search of food and shelter. But this inhuman treatment which they suffer is evidently stirring up sympathetic assistance in Cape Colony and bringing hundreds of men every day to their relief. In following Chamberlain's policy England is weakening herself in the field.

"Yes, certainly. I was in battle at Colesburg, Arundel, on Modder river and Sand river, where the Irish-American brigade under Colonel Blake did splendid service in blowing up the great Virginia bridge under fire from the enemy.

"We sometimes carry along as many prisoners as we have fighting men, as at Nooitgedacht, where we had some 2,000 prisoners. We release privates, because they are such a great incumbrance to us, but of course we deprive them of their rifles and ammunition. Noncommissioned officers and privates cannot be compelled to give parole under the laws of war. Our humane method, however, makes the British soldiers more willing to surrender to us. At the place above mentioned the prisoners refused to return to their camp when released by us and had to be compelled to go back. General Ben Viljoen, commanding, had armed troops to drive them away from our camp and toward that of the British.

"As to whether Paul Kruger will visit this country I do not know. I do not see any use in it. He may put the European powers ablaze, but South Africa will probably work out its own salvation. I shall try to explain definitely in my lectures how the war originated and who was to blame and why."

INDIGO TO BE DISPLACED.

German Chemists Threaten to Destroy a British Colonial Industry.

British manufacturers have not thought it worth while to study the progressive chemistry of aniline or naphthol dyes, says a London correspondent to the Paris Messenger. They have been content to leave the field open to Germany, and the result is now obvious. Time was when British aniline dyes commanded the market of the world. It is impossible to understand why that market was ever lost. Nothing but indifference can account for it, and then we have to explain the indifference, which is impossible. At any rate, the market has gone, and there is not an aniline or naphthol dye used at the present day which is not produced in Germany.

The industry of the manufacture of British dyes is dead, and the industry in British India of the growth of indigo will follow it. Behar and other provinces will feel it, and it will mean the ruin of innumerable natives who have lived year after year on the produce of indigo. Dyeing with indigo, however, is at best a clumsy and prolonged process. It means immersions in various compounds, according to the material of the fabric to be dyed.

Like indigotine, the new German dye provides for a single bath. So confident are the manufacturers of the success of their product that a considerable sum has been spent on the necessary productive plant, and the new year will witness the advent of the new dye. Save as a specialty, indigo will not last beyond a year or two, and then another British industry will have succumbed to German competition.

PREHISTORIC RACE TRACES.

Remarkable Discoveries of Professor Emanuel in Michigan.

Professor Crispo Emanuel of the Royal College of Learning, Madrid, is reputed to have made some remarkable discoveries in "the thumb," says a Saginaw (Mich.) dispatch to the Chicago Times-Herald. He has found positive traces of a great prehistoric race that occupied North America thousands of years before the sailing of Columbus from Genoa.

A stone wall, measuring 15 to 20 feet in height and somewhat wider at its base, has been found buried in the marshes and extending about 25 miles from a point near Sebewaing to the little village of Parisville.

It traverses parts of three counties and marks the southern boundary line of "the thumb." The wall is in a good state of preservation and has escaped discovery for so long a time only because of the marshy land in which it is buried.

But How Much Is That?

About the only idea, says the Philadelphia Times, the powers seem to have of getting out of China is to get out of it all they can.

UNFAIR TO BANGOR.

Almost every town in Maine of 1,000 or more inhabitants has from one to ten markets where venison is retailed all through the open season. Here in the very heart of the game region, where from 15 to 30 tons of venison pass west every day in the week, no man can buy venison at any price, and men who want the meat of deer must ride far out on the road to Amherst or Elsworth and run the chance of meeting a hunter who is bringing a carcass to market, says the New York Sun.

The famine came about through a fit of temper of the marketmen, who are angry because the new law will not permit them to ship game and game birds out of the state. Previous to 1898 from 100 to 250 partridges were sent west from Bangor every day. Marketmen had from ten to twenty gunners constantly in their employ shooting partridges, snipe and woodcock for Boston and New York markets, where birds commanded fancy prices. As soon as the law prohibiting the sale of game birds was enacted, the marketmen agreed to handle no game of any kind, and the embargo has been rigidly enforced.

Last year Fred Johnson, who is the Delmonico of Bangor, took out a license to sell venison to such of his customers as wanted deermeat on their tables at home, but the marketmen refused to patronize his place and did all they could to injure his trade. This year he found that they were doing him more harm than the profits on sales were doing good, and when it came to take out licenses for 1900 he did not ask for a renewal. Meantime Portland, Augusta, Rockland and other Maine cities that have no deer within 50 miles of their limits, are having all the deer meat they can eat, and are getting it cheaper than the price asked for beef.

TWENTY-FOUR O'CLOCK.

A Time-Keeping System That Is Strongly Urged by the Railroads.

According to a decree recently issued in Spain the hours will be there counted, after January 1, from one to twenty-four each day, beginning at midnight. The government offices, the telegraph, telephone, railroad and steamship lines have been directed to observe the new method. On this continent it may already be seen in the time-tables of the Canadian Pacific railroad, says the Youth's Companion.

This change has long been urged in this country. Some years ago, when the railroads brought about the present system of "standard time," or, as it used to be called, "railroad time," they desired to inaugurate the 24-hour scheme, too. The change was too radical to be popular, and rather than imperil the success of the other part of the programme, the railroads abandoned it. Time-tables are now usually printed with the afternoon hours in heavy type, and morning hours in light, and this device eliminates much confusion.

If one had nothing to do but to travel by rail and study time-tables, the proposed change would be eminently desirable; but for 99 of every 100 acts and appointments outside of those connected with the railroads, there is no confusion arising from the present system. When we read that a lecture is to begin at eight o'clock, no one thinks it is to begin in the morning; and if Mary Minns should write to say that she will drive over at 11 o'clock, almost anyone would expect to see her in the forenoon, even if she did not add "a. m."

In astronomical observatories the 24-hour system is already in use, except that in them the day begins at noon instead of midnight.

BALLOON ASCENSIONS.

Sensations Experienced by Aeronauts at Various Heights—Dangerous Undertakings.

Two Frenchmen recently made an ascent in a balloon at Vincennes with a view to reaching the greatest altitude that could possibly be obtained. They did not succeed in passing the record, however. During their journey they kept a record of their impressions and sensations at various heights. They first began to experience the nauseating effects of the rarefied air at 18,200 feet, when their temples ached and their visions were blurred. At 20,150 feet, says the Scientific American, one of the adventurers was rendered so ill that he could neither speak nor reach his bag of oxygen and had to be attended by his companion.

Shortly afterward the latter was somewhat paralyzed and could only move with difficulty. But with the application of oxygen they were restored and they were but little inconvenienced. At 21,450 feet they described the cold as being intense and that their beards were covered with ice. When 22,400 feet was attained they were rendered so helpless and the pain was so great that they could hardly gather sufficient strength to open the valve of the balloon. When they reached the ground they were in a very exhausted condition.

Dr. Berson ascended some months ago from London to a height of 27,500 feet, while Messrs. Coxwell and Glaisher ascended to the height of 35,000 feet, at which altitude one of the travelers was rendered unconscious, while the other only just succeeded in opening the valve by pulling the rope with his teeth.

A Furnace's Breathing.

The furnace of an Atlantic liner will consume no less than 7,500,000 cubic feet of air an hour.

THE PERPLEXING LEONIDES.

Astronomers Prepare to Photograph Heavenly Display That May Not Appear.

Yale astronomers are preparing to photograph what Leonides appear in the heavens this fall. Last year at this time the most extensive preparations were made to photograph the meteoric display, but the cloudy skies and the fact that but few leonids appeared threw the astronomers into a state of great perplexity. Since then the reason for the non-appearance of the meteorites has not been discovered. Dr. Frederick L. Chase, of the Yale observatory, says:

"There is just as much reason to expect the leonids at this time as last year. Astronomers have not yet been able to discover why it is that with the usual regularity with which the leonids come every 33 years the shower last year failed to appear. There are two possible explanations of this. Since the last great shower in 1866 Jupiter has passed quite close to the portion of the orbit containing the meteors due in 1899, and has, according to calculations, so perturbed the path as to make them cross the line of the earth's orbit several hundred thousand miles inside the orbit—that is, nearer the sun—so that the earth may not have passed through the swarm. At the same time the stream will take but four or five hours in passing any way, and if it comes before the radiant is above the horizon it will not be seen at all.

"The second possible explanation is that there was a dearth of meteors in that portion of the swarm encountered by the earth in 1899, and there is no reason to-day to think that they are evenly distributed. It is possible, however, to believe that the portion of the stream due at the intersection of the earth's orbit this year, has not yet been perturbed by Jupiter in the same way as last year."

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

Order Establishing Ditch.

State of Minnesota, } ss.
County of Red Lake. }

Whereas, At a session of the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Red Lake State of Minnesota, held July 21st, 1900, a petition signed by Laurent Gagner, and other land owners, whose lands were liable to be affected by, or assessed for, the expense of the construction of the work proposed therein, praying for the establishment and construction of a public drainage ditch along a route described therein, accompanied by a bond duly approved, as provided by law, was filed with the County Auditor of said County; and it appearing by proper evidence to the satisfaction of said Board of County Commissioners that at least thirty (30) days' notice has been given of the pendency of said petition and of the time at which the same would be heard, as by law provided, whereupon the said Board did, at its session on the 21st day of July A. D. 1900 proceed to hear and determine said petition; and said Board having determined that the construction of such ditch would be of public benefit and utility, and conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare, we did accept said petition, and thereupon did appoint as viewers of said proposed work, three (3) resident freeholders of said Red Lake County, who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and are not of kin to any of the parties interested therein, and directed them to meet preparatory to commencing their duties as such viewers at the terminus of said ditch in said County, at one o'clock p. m. on the 24th day of September 1900; and certified copies of the said petition and order of said Board appointing them as said viewers was issued to and served upon said viewers as by law provided, as will more fully appear from the certificate of service of Charles Sampson as Sheriff of said County, now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said County, they proceeded, at the time set in said order, with a surveyor who is a civil engineer, and made an accurate survey of the line of said proposed drainage ditch from its source to its outlet, and did cause stakes to be placed along said line at each 100 feet, as numbered progressing down stream from its source, and made and filed a report thereof and reported that said drainage ditch would be of public utility; and in their said report made the necessary computations and assessments, description of location, the land through which the same would pass, the names of the owners, and the damages or allowances thereto, the expense attending such work, and all the estimates, as required by law, duly sworn to as by law required.

And the Auditor of said Red Lake County did, after the filing of said report, cause a notice to be given to be published, posted and mailed, as by law provided, of the pendency of said petition and of the time and place set for the hearing thereof.

Now, Therefore, We, the Board of County Commissioners of said County of Red Lake having met in session at the time set for the hearing of said petition, to-wit, the 7th day of January 1901 and adjourned to the 9th day of January 1901 and proceeded to hear the same, and having found that the report of said viewers is made according to the provisions of law, and that the proposed drainage ditch to be of public utility, and conducive to public health, be of public benefit and convenience, and, from the evidence before us, that the estimated benefits of said work are greater than its total cost, including damages awarded, do hereby locate and establish the said drainage ditch according to the report of said viewers appointed and acting as aforesaid; which said report, together with the plats and exhibits accompanying the same is hereby referred to and made a part hereof for greater particularity, as determining the location, width, depth and manner of construction of said proposed drainage ditch. And the said Board of County Commissioners having from said viewers' report and the evidence before them determined upon the benefits to be assessed and the damages to be awarded to the several tracts of land in said report described, do hereby assess benefits and award damages to the said lands according to exhibit 1 of Terrebonne ditch now on file in the Auditor's office of said Red Lake County.

And it is further ordered that the damages awarded to the persons or corporations above named be paid out of the County Treasury, and that the Auditor and the Chairman of said Board cause warrants to be drawn on the Treasurer of said County and delivered to the persons entitled thereof, as provided by law.

CLAPP WON.

Gen. Clapp, the "Black Eagle of Minnesota," has been named by the Republicans as the successor to Senator Davis. The selection will give general satisfaction throughout the state, the real cause for rejoicing being the fact that Tom Lowry did not succeed in buying the senatorship. R. G. Evans made a manly fight, and would probably have won had he not been shamefully betrayed by Minneapolis people.

Moses E. Clapp was born in Delphi, Ind., May 25, 1851. His parents removed to Hudson, Wis., in 1857. After receiving a good common school education, he studied law, and graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1873. He entered upon the practice of law at Hudson, Wis., and was quite successful. He was elected county attorney for St. Croix county in 1879. He removed to Fergus Falls, Minn., in 1881, and was city attorney during 1883, 1884 and 1885. He was nominated for attorney general by the Republican convention in September, 1885, defeating W. S. Pattee, now dean of the law department of the University of Minnesota, and Frank B. Kellogg, of the late firm of Davis, Kellogg & Severance. He was elected by a complimentary majority, and, being renominated, served as attorney general three terms. In 1892 he moved to St. Paul, where he has since resided. In 1896 he was a candidate for nomination for governor. While he was defeated, the contest demonstrated that he was one of the ablest men of the state. He is a good lawyer, and well informed upon all leading questions, a forcible speaker, is a fine orator and, with a good personal appearance, commands an audience when he speaks. He is dignified, yet congenial and accessible to all, and, as a result, very popular. He is married and has three children.

CHAT WITH A BOER OFFICER.

Commandant Jan Krige Tells of Treatment of British Prisoners.

Commandant Jan Krige, a Boer fighting man just from the ranks in the Transvaal who recently gave a free lecture in Washington, is a born South African farmer and has been in the field for nearly a year. Having lost his horse, he, with many others, was sent to Lourenco Marques by General Botha till he could be again mounted. The Portuguese prevented his return to the field, and he escaped on a German ship. He speaks English with facility and is now presenting the cause of the Boers to the people of the United States. He made his first platform appearance the other evening.

The commandant said to a representative of the Washington Star in reply to questions:

"Judging from reports received only through English sources, the Boers have great cause to congratulate themselves and to expect eventual victory. We do not expect to drive the British into the sea, but we do expect to enjoy the re-establishment of our republics and the reoccupation of our homes. At present our families are scattered far and wide, thousands having been driven from their homes and left to wander in search of food and shelter. But this inhuman treatment which they suffer is evidently stirring up sympathetic assistance in Cape Colony and bringing hundreds of men every day to their relief. In following Chamberlain's policy England is weakening herself in the field.

"Yes, certainly, I was in battle at Colesburg, Arundel, on Modder river and Sand river, where the Irish-American brigade under Colonel Blake did splendid service in blowing up the great Virginia bridge under fire from the enemy.

"We sometimes carry along as many prisoners as we have fighting men, as at Nooitgedacht, where we had some 2,000 prisoners. We release privates, because they are such a great incumbrance to us, but of course we deprive them of their rifles and ammunition. Noncommissioned officers and privates cannot be compelled to give parole under the laws of war. Our humane method, however, makes the British soldiers more willing to surrender to us. At the place above mentioned the prisoners refused to return to their camp when released by us and had to be compelled to go back. General Ben Viljoen, commanding, had armed troops to drive them away from our camp and toward that of the British.

"As to whether Paul Kruger will visit this country I do not know. I do not see any use in it. He may put the European powers ablaze, but South Africa will probably work out its own salvation. I shall try to explain definitely in my lectures how the war originated and who was to blame and why."

UNFAIR TO BANGOR.

Almost every town in Maine of 1,000 or more inhabitants has from one to ten markets where venison is retailed all through the open season. Here in the very heart of the game region, where from 15 to 30 tons of venison pass west every day in the week, no man can buy venison at any price, and men who want the meat of deer must ride far out on the road to Amherst or Ellsworth and run the chance of meeting a hunter who is bringing a carcass to market, says the New York Sun.

The famine came about through a fit of temper of the marketmen, who are angry because the new law will not permit them to ship game and game birds out of the state. Previous to 1898 from 100 to 250 partridges were sent west from Bangor every day. Marketmen had from ten to twenty gunners constantly in their employ shooting partridges, snipe and woodcock for Boston and New York markets, where birds commanded fancy prices. As soon as the law prohibiting the sale of game birds was enacted, the marketmen agreed to handle no game of any kind, and the embargo has been rigidly enforced.

Last year Fred Johnson, who is the Delmonico of Bangor, took out a license to sell venison to such of his customers as wanted deerment on their tables at home, but the marketmen refused to patronize his place and did all they could to injure his trade. This year he found that they were doing him more harm than the profits on sales were doing good, and when it came to take out licenses for 1900 he did not ask for a renewal. Meantime Portland, Augusta, Rockland and other Maine cities that have no deer within 50 miles of their limits, are having all the deer meat they can eat, and are getting it cheaper than the price asked for beef.

TWENTY-FOUR O'CLOCK.

A Time-Keeping System That Is Strongly Urged by the Railroads.

According to a decree recently issued in Spain the hours will be there counted, after January 1, from one to twenty-four each day, beginning at midnight. The government offices, the telegraph, telephone, railroad and steamship lines have been directed to observe the new method. On this continent it may already be seen in the time-tables of the Canadian Pacific railroad, says the Youth's Companion.

This change has long been urged in this country. Some years go, when the railroads brought about the present system of "standard time," or, as it used to be called, "railroad time," they desired to inaugurate the 24-hour scheme, too. The change was too radical to be popular, and rather than imperil the success of the other part of the programme, the railroads abandoned it. Time-tables are now usually printed with the afternoon hours in heavy type, and morning hours in light, and this device eliminates much confusion.

THE PERPLEXING LEONIDES.

Astronomers Prepare to Photograph Heavenly Display That May Not Appear.

Yale astronomers are preparing to photograph what Leonides appear in the heavens this fall. Last year at this time the most extensive preparations were made to photograph the meteoric display, but the cloudy skies and the fact that but few leonids appeared threw the astronomers into a state of great perplexity. Since then the reason for the non-appearance of the meteorites has not been discovered. Dr. Frederick L. Chase, of the Yale observatory, says:

"There is just as much reason to expect the leonids at this time as last year. Astronomers have not yet been able to discover why it is that with the usual regularity with which the leonids come every 33 years the shower last year failed to appear. There are two possible explanations of this. Since the last great shower in 1866 Jupiter has passed quite close to the portion of the orbit containing the meteors due in 1899, and has, according to calculations, so perturbed the path as to make them cross the line of the earth's orbit several hundred thousand miles inside the orbit—that is, nearer the sun—so that the earth may not have passed through the swarm. At the same time the stream will take but four or five hours in passing any way, and if it comes before the radiant is above the horizon it will not be seen at all.

"The second possible explanation is that there was a dearth of meteors in that portion of the swarm encountered by the earth in 1899, and there is no reason to-day to think that they are evenly distributed. It is possible, however, to believe that the portion of the stream due at the intersection of the earth's orbit this year, has not yet been perturbed by Jupiter in the same way as last year."

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was, and I would not be without them at any price. I

Order Establishing Ditch.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake. } ss.

Whereas, At a session of the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Red Lake State of Minnesota, held July 21st, 1900 a petition signed by Laurent Gagner, and other land owners, whose lands were liable to be affected by, or assessed for, the expense of the construction of the work proposed therein, praying for the establishment and construction of a public drainage ditch along a route described therein, accompanied by a bond duly approved, as provided by law, was filed with the County Auditor of said County; and it appearing by proper evidence to the satisfaction of said Board of County Commissioners that at least thirty (30) days' notice has been given of the pendency of said petition and of the time at which the same would be heard, as by law provided, whereupon the said Board did, at its session on the 21st day of July A. D. 1900 proceed to hear and determine said petition; and said Board having determined that the construction of such ditch would be of public benefit and utility, and conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare, we did accept said petition, and thereupon did appoint as viewers of said proposed work, three (3) resident freeholders of said Red Lake County, who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and are not of kin to any of the parties interested therein, and directed them to meet preparatory to commencing their duties as such viewers, at the terminus of said ditch in said County, at one o'clock p. m. on the 24th day of September 1900; and certified copies of the said petition and order of said Board appointing them as said viewers was issued to and served upon said viewers as by law provided, as will more fully appear from the certificate of service of Charles Sampson as Sheriff of said County, now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said County, they proceeded, at the time set in said order, with a surveyor who is a civil engineer, and made an accurate survey of the line of said proposed drainage ditch from its source to its outlet, and did cause stakes to be placed along said line at each 100 feet, as numbered progressing down stream from its source; and made and filed a report thereof; and reported that said drainage ditch would be of public utility; and in their said report made the necessary computations and assessments, description of location, the land through which the same would pass, the names of the owners, and the damages or allowance thereto, the expense attending such work, and all the estimates, as required by law, duly sworn to as by law required.

And the Auditor of said Red Lake County did, after the filing of said report, cause a notice to be given; to be published, posted and mailed, as by law provided, of the pendency of said petition and of the time and place set for the hearing thereof.

Now, Therefore, We, the Board of County Commissioners of said County of Red Lake having met in session at the time set for the hearing of said petition, to-wit, the 7th day of January 1901 and adjourned to the 9th day of January 1901 and proceeded to hear the same, and having found that the report of said viewers is made according to the provisions of law, and that the proposed drainage ditch to be of public utility, and conducive to public health, or of public benefit and convenience, and, from the evidence before us, that the estimated benefits of said work are greater than its total cost, including damages awarded, do hereby locate and establish the said drainage ditch according to the report of said viewers appointed and acting as aforesaid; which said report, together with the plats and exhibits accompanying the same is hereby referred to and made a part hereof for greater particularity, as determining the location, width, depth and manner of construction of said proposed drainage ditch. And the said Board of County Commissioners having from said viewers' report, and the evidence before them determined upon the benefits to be assessed and the damages to be awarded to the several tracts of land in said report described, do hereby assess benefits and award damages to the said lands; according to exhibit 4 of Terrebonne ditch now on file in the Auditors' office of said Red Lake County.

And it is further ordered that the damages awarded to the persons or corporations above named be paid out of the County Treasury, and that the Auditor and the Chairman of said Board cause warrants to be drawn on the Treasurer of said County and delivered to the persons entitled thereof, as provided by law.

Given under our hand this 9th day of January A. D. 1901.

How a Boy Measured a Tree.

He is not a boy in a book. He lives in our house. He seldom says anything remarkable. He eats oatmeal in large quantities and tears his trousers and goes through the toes of his boots and loses his cap and slams the doors and chases the cat just like any other boy. But he is remarkable, for he asks a few questions and does much thinking. If he does not understand, he whistles—an excellent habit on most occasions.

There was much whistling in our yard one summer. It seemed to be an all summer's performance. Near the end of the season, however, our boy announced the height of our tall maple to be 33 feet.

"Why how do you know?" was the general question.

"Measured it."

"How?"

"Footrule and yardstick."

"You didn't climb that tall tree?" his mother asked anxiously.

"No, mother; I just found the length of the shadow and measured that."

"But the length of the shadow changes."

"Yes, mother, but twice a day the shadows are just as long as things themselves. I've been trying it all summer. I drove a stick into the ground, and when the shadow was just as long as the stick I knew that the shadow of the tree would be just as long as the tree, and that's 33 feet."

"So that is what you have been whistling about all summer?"

"Did I whistle?" asked Tom.

Can She Be It

Through many, many summers
I look, as through a glass,
And see a world of showers and flowers
And laughing children pass,
And in her big blue sunbonnet
One other little lass—

A lass who watched the swallows
Skim just beyond her hand,
And where the flickers fled and sped
And nests of hang birds fanned
And felt those birds were fairy folk
On wing to fairyland.

In her warm fist she carried—
Trudging o'er hills and dales—
In tiny papers laid, and weighed
As if in fairy scales,
The salt that catches bobolinks
When sprinkled on their tails.

A little lass and wistful,
Who gazed up the far sky,
And reached for fairy things and wings
In vain and wondered why;
Poor little lass! I wonder still Could she be really I?

A Boy Preacher.

George Haines of Winfield, Pa., is a theological wonder. Aged but 9 years, he holds religious services every Sunday morning and preaches a sermon, his favorite texts being taken from the fourteenth chapter of St. John.

Young Haines is the son of Amos Haines, a well known merchant. In preaching he makes many striking gestures and evinces the greatest earnestness and enthusiasm.

Many stories are told of the lad's precocity by the townspeople. Almost from the moment he could talk George began to show unmistakable signs of a preacher's calling.

In Search of Honey.

It has been said that the busy bee will go as far as 12 miles in search of honey, but beekeepers declare this to be absurd. One states that the insect will die of starvation if it has to seek a hunting ground more than three miles from the hive. Some give the bee greater powers of endurance and allow that it may fly up to five or even six miles, although such journeys would be killing if regularly taken. As a rule, however, it is supposed bees find their supplies within a distance of two miles or so of their home.

A Lamp Roost.

Nellie was much interested in Aunt Mary's chandelier when she went to the city to stay with her, and when she went home she exclaimed:

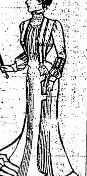
"Oh, mother, I do wish we had a place for our lamps to roost on like Aunt Mary has!"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

WOMAN AND FASHION.

A Smart Gown For the House—A Drab Serge Tailor Made Costume.

The sketch portrays a charming gown in old rose faced cloth. Perpendicular rows of black stitching adorn either side of the front, while the left side is further ornamented with a fancifully arranged fold of black satin and three fancy metal buttons. Two narrow shaped flounces bordered with black satin trim the lower edge, and one encircles the upper part.

The bodice opens in the middle of the front and is trimmed at the waist with a wide band of lace, over which pass the satin straps, extending from shoulders to belt, and enriched with buttons. In the interior is a narrow vest of tinsel brocade opening on a full plastron of white chiffon falling from a pointed yoke of white lace. The collar band is of the lace, while the turnover collar is of the brocade. The belt is of black satin almost covered with lace. The short bell sleeve of cloth is ornamented with a wide band of lace, with straps of satin crossing it and fastened down with the buttons. The full undersleeve is of plaited chiffon gathered into a cuff of brocade.—Philadelphia Ledger.



CHARMING HOUSE GOWN.

Winter Skirts.

Plain skirts are considered very smart, but that does not by any means signify that trimmed skirts have gone out of fashion. Quite the contrary, for the dressmakers are all busy turning out skirts that show the greatest quantity of fine work, and it really must needs tax the ingenuity of the designers to evolve so many new ideas all the time. A good illustration of this is shown in a satin and net gown that is made of a delicate shade of rose pink. The body of the skirt is of rose pink accordion plaited net trimmed with two wide bands of silk or satin of exactly the same shade cut in pointed scallops at both sides. The points of the scallops are held together with bands of pink ruching, and on the foot of the skirt between the points are large flowers of exactly the same shade of pink. The waist of the pink net has a fichu of the same and a dainty trimming of lace just in front, while a high draped belt of green velvet carries out the coloring of a pink rose, which was evidently the plan of the gown.—Harper's Bazar.

A Tailor Made Costume.

The tailor made costume represented is of drab serge, the skirt ornamented with two bands of violet taffetas running down the front and round the bottom. The collar and lapels are faced with violet panne, and the corsage and sleeves are trimmed with violet taffetas.—Paris Herald.

NORSEMEN AT ODDS.

THE PRINCE REGENT OF NORWAY AND SWEDEN IN TROUBLE.

Gustave Is Disliked by the Norwegians, Who Seek Separation—Plausibility of Sweden's Contention—Revival of an Old Quarrel.

The spirit of unrest that led the Norsemen of old to the ends of the earth—some say to America itself—is again manifesting itself in the ancient kingdom of Norway. The hardy Norwegians, who draw the breath of freedom from their mountains and fiords, are again agitating the question of breaking their unwelcome yoke with Sweden, their sister country.

The present agitation is due to the fact that the king of the dual monarchy, Oscar II, a scholarly and mild mannered man, is ill, and his son, Prince Gustave, has assumed the regency. Gustave is extremely unpopular in the Norwegian moiety of his realm owing to his determined resistance to the demands of the Norwegians for more independence in foreign and other affairs. The Swedes, with Prince Gustave at their head, say that the Norwegians having obtained an ell in having their separate flag granted want a yard and desire the complete separation of the two kingdoms. This they are determined not to grant, for they contend, with great show of reason, that the union of the two kingdoms is all that prevents their sharing the fate of Finland, that of being gobbled up by the Russian bear.

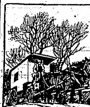
KING OSCAR OF SWEDEN.

Norway and Denmark were united for many centuries as one kingdom until the early part of this century. Sweden was also at one time a part of the union. When the coalition was formed against Napoleon, one of the conditions was that in event of success Sweden and Norway should be united under one king. The Norwegians offered resistance to this plan and elected as king the heir of the old royal line of Sweden. He proved incompetent, and the Swedish king, who was formerly Napoleon's marshal, Bernadotte, became king as well of Norway. Each of the two halves of the monarchy retained its own constitution and was in fact autonomous. The union has not proved altogether a peaceable one, and there have been continual threats of secession on the part of the Norwegians. The present king, Oscar II, has been successful in conciliating his rebellious Norwegian subjects, but his heir apparent, Prince Gustave, is a firebrand to them. He has persistently and successfully opposed their desires for greater freedom in foreign affairs and for separation.

HOUSE WAGON AND HEALTH.

Trip of Three Thousand Miles Made by the Farnsworth Family.

Here is a consumptive who has recovered his health in a new way. A year ago when Mr. E. E. Farnsworth left Winfield, Kan., he could hardly walk owing to his weakness and emaciation, whereas now he is the picture of health, brown as an Indian and apparently cured of all his ailments. As a last resort, when he saw that the disease was getting the better of him, he decided to start off on a novel journey. A house wagon was built which for one year was his only home and that of his wife and her father. This was drawn by a pair of horses. The trio covered about 3,000 miles, traversed six states and even entered Mexico. They discovered and investigated some practically unknown cliff dwellings, and not a day's illness marred the success of their journey. When they found a particularly desirable spot they would remain there until their provisions were exhausted and then move on leisurely.



THE FARNSWORTH HOUSE WAGON.

A REPENTANT SINNER.

By Count Leo Tolstoi.

Explanation of the cause of Count Leo Tolstoi's excommunication from the Russian church is found by his friends in his latest story entitled "A Repentant Sinner." This story was first published in the Novoe Vremya, St. Petersburg, and such was its unusual nature that it immediately involved all the doctrinaires in heated discussion. Following is a translation of the story:

"There once dwelt on the earth a man 60 years old. He had lived his entire life without virtue and without repentance, and this man became sick, and still he did not repent. And when death approached and his last hour had come he prayed.

"'Lord, as thou didst pardon the thief on the cross, pardon me.'

"After he had spoken he gave up the ghost, and his spirit, beloved of God, had faith in the mercy of the Creator and soared to the threshold of paradise. And the sinner knocked suppliantly for entrance into heaven. From behind the gate came a voice, saying:

"'Who knocks at the gate of paradise? How did he live on earth?'

"The voice of the judge replied, enumerating all the sins of the man. There was not one virtue to his credit. And the voice from behind the gate said:

"'Sinners cannot enter the portals of heaven. Depart!'

"But the man said, 'Lord, I hear thy voice, but I have never seen thy face, and I do not know thy name.'

"And the voice replied, 'I am Peter, the apostle.'

"And the sinner said: 'Have pity on me, Peter. Remember the weakness of men and the great heart of God. Were you not a disciple of Christ? Was it not you who received the doctrines from his lips? You have had the example of his life. Oh, remember! He was in trouble and asked you three times not to sleep, but to pray, and you slept because your eyelids were heavy with sleep, and thrice he came and found you asleep. Even so have I done. Recall also that you renounced him three times before Caiaphas after promising him thrice never to deny him. This also have I done. You will not keep me out of heaven, will you?'

"And the voice died away behind the gates of paradise, and at the same instant the sinner ceased knocking, for the gate of heaven opened. But another voice was heard from behind an inner door, which demanded:

"'Who is this man, and how did he live on earth?'

"Once more the voice of the accuser replied, enumerating all the sins of the man, and there was not a single meritorious action to his credit, and the voice replied from behind the inner door:

"'Depart. So ignoble a sinner cannot live among us in paradise.'

"And the man said, 'Lord, I hear thy voice, but I have never seen thy face, nor do I know thy name.'

"'I am the royal prophet David.'

"The sinner did not despair. He did not recede, but said:

"'Have pity on me, King David. Remember the weakness of man and the large heart of God. God loved you. He gave you a place above other men. You had everything—royalty, glory, gold, favorites and children. But from the infinite height of your position you saw the wife of a poor man. Sin surrounded you. You yielded to temptation, and you took the wife of Uri and delivered her husband to the avenging sword of the Ammonites. You, the king, took from the poor man his last ewe. Even so have I done. And remember how you repentantly said, "I remember my sins, and I repent of them." Even so have I done, and surely you will not bar the door of heaven for me.'

"And the voice died away from behind the inner door of heaven. At that moment the sinner ceased knocking, for the door was opened half way. Then a third voice came from behind the door and said:

"'Who is this man and how did he live on the earth?'

"And for the third time the voice of the accuser replied, enumerating the man's sins without recounting a single virtue, and the voice replied:

"'Get thee hence! Such sinners cannot enter the kingdom of heaven.'

"And the man said, 'I hear thy voice, but I have never seen thy face, and I do not know thy name.'

"And the voice replied, 'I am John the Evangelist, the favorite disciple of Christ.'

"At that the sinner rejoiced and said: 'Now they surely cannot keep me out. Peter and David let me enter because they knew the weakness of human nature and the great heart of God. You, John, will surely let me enter, because you are filled with love. Was it not you, O John the Evangelist, who exclaimed in your lifetime, "God is love, and who does not love cannot know God?" Was it not you who, in your weakness, but repentance, exclaimed, "Brothers, love ye one another?" How will you then refuse me; how will you deny me entrance? Either renounce what you have said or love me and open for me the inner door of heaven.'

"And the door opened wide, and John the Evangelist, embraced the sinner and allowed him to enter the kingdom of heaven."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Old Lawyer—How'd I get my start? Well, shortly after I was called to the bar a rich uncle died, and I came into possession of a cool hundred thousand.

TRIBUTE TO DAVIS

SENATORS EULOGIZE THE DECEASED MINNESOTAN.

Nelson, Hoar, Lodge and Others Included in the List of Speakers—Duluth Docks to Be Raised—A. B. Stickney Weds—Drop In Printing Twine—State News in General.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—No legislative business of importance was transacted by the senate. The session was devoted to services held in memory of the late Cushman K. Davis of Minnesota. The long and distinguished services of the Minnesota senator and the intimate relations he sustained to his colleagues in the senate had endeared him to all and when his demise came every member of the body felt that he had suffered a personal loss. For many years Mr. Davis served as chairman of the committee on foreign relations and in that capacity and in the capacity of member of the Paris peace commission he was intimately identified with the foreign affairs of the government.

Immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, Mr. Nelson (Minn.) called up his resolution expressive of the regret of the senate at the death of Senator Davis. As Mr. Nelson called up the resolution Mrs. Davis, accompanied by some friends, entered the executive gallery of the senate.

Mr. Nelson the First Speaker.

Mr. Nelson, the colleague of the late Senator Davis, was the first speaker. He began by touching upon the history of the deceased senator, saying that he died at a time when in the full maturity of his great mental vigor, at a time when he was better equipped than ever to serve his country and at a time when his country stood in the greatest need of his services. Continuing, Senator Nelson said:

"To trace his life, the development of his vigorous mind and its wonderful resources from youth to manhood, from a great lawyer to a profound statesman and leader, is to scan a human epic, marvelous and inspiring in its progress, and grand and enduring in its results and outcome. He was equipped with a mind of the first order, eager, thirsty and searching. In his youth he was a most ardent student, to whom his lessons were but the doorsteps to the sanctuary of knowledge, which he was ever exploring. He became a devouring student of history, philosophy and poetry at a time when most youths are bothered in their arithmetics, their grammar and their geographies."

Trained in Diplomacy and Statecraft.

Mr. Nelson paid a tribute to the profundity of the knowledge of his colleague and the distinguished position he occupied in the Spanish war debates and conferences and said:

"He exhausted and rendered clear and lucid the most profound and intricate problems of diplomacy and statecraft. When he had spoken, there was little if anything more to bear on the subject."

Mr. Nelson paid a tribute to the literary accomplishment of his late colleague and closed with an apostrophe to American manhood as represented by Mr. Davis.

Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts, commenting upon the fact that so many senators die in office, said that in the eulogies pronounced in the chamber the portraitures have been true and faithful. In a young republic, he said, the greatest place for a live man was that of a soldier in time of war and a statesman in time of peace. Mr. Davis was both. He did a man's full duty in both.

Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts analyzed the character of Mr. Davis, as from the closest personal friendship, and said the late senator was not fully appreciated as a public man.

WILL RAISE DOCKS.

Engineering Feat Planned by Iron Range Road.

DULUTH, Jan. 12.—President Greatsinger, Chief Engineer Angst and Superintendent McGonagle of the Iron Range road have been in consultation for some days over the improvements to be made this winter at the road's terminals, and plans for the reconstruction of docks 3 and 4 are now in the hands of contractors. From 200 to 400 men will be employed in the work, which will take from now till well into the spring. Both docks will be raised bodily, one six feet, the other nine. As they are a quarter of a mile long, 50 feet wide and more than 50 feet high above water, the task will be a difficult engineering feat.

Contractors After Their Pay.

John Graham of Minneapolis had already placed a lien on the line for materials furnished.

JOSEPH, Mo., Jan. 10.—The announcement is made that the transfer of the Sioux City Western league base ball franchise was formally made to Minneapolis during the secret session of league representatives in St. Joseph on Tuesday. It is also said the Pueblo franchise will probably be transferred to Sioux City.

L. D. Marshall, superintendent of the St. Anthony & Dakota Elevator company, is being mentioned for the position of state grain inspector. He would make a good, capable and honest official, and has a large number of friends in Thief River Falls who would be pleased to see him secure the job.

Bemidji is to have a new depot. A Great Northern engineer has been there to lay out the grounds. It will contain two fine waiting rooms, a large office and a freight room 120 feet long. This will be a decided improvement over the one which was constructed when the town was an infant.

A Crookston Chinaman has an ambition to become a homesteader, but the exclusion act prevents him from becoming a citizen, but it was pointed out that there is nothing in the act which would prevent him from declaring his intention of becoming a citizen—which is all that is necessary to take a homestead. His application has been rejected until an opinion can be had from the proper authorities.

An exchange makes these truthful observations: If there is anyone who has gained the idea that the prosperity of a town, village or city is guided by the wealth of its inhabitants, he is mistaken. History shows us that it is the uniformity with which the citizens pull together when any important duty is to be accomplished that builds cities and makes them prosperous. A man with a thousand dollars, backed up by genuine interest in the welfare of his town, can do more for its upbuilding than a millionaire who locks up his money and snaps his finger at home progress.

ELECTION FEB. 19

TO VOTE UPON THE BOND PROPOSITION.

At a meeting of the city council held the first of the week, it was decided to vote upon the proposition of issuing bonds to the amount of $7,500, the money to be used to pay for the electric light plant. The election will be held on Tuesday, Feb. 19.

While the proposition to be voted upon will be for or against bonds, the real question involved will be whether or not the city will continue to own and operate the electric light plant, or whether it is to be sold to a private corporation and a franchise granted. As it will undoubtedly prove to be a paying proposition, THE NEWS is in favor of seeing it owned by the city.

An Enjoyable Evening.

One of the most enjoyable social events of the season was the hop given last Friday by the Aurora Borealis club in the Odd Fellows' hall. The club, which is composed of a number of young people of this city, achieved a notable success in this, their first attempt at entertaining. Mrs. K. M. Hansen, Mrs. C. L. Dobner and Mrs. Jas. Meehan were the chaperones.

We have unlimited money to loan on improved farms. Will loan on final receiver's receipt. Interest reasonable. No delays. Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office over First State Bank.

INJURE PROPERTY.

KNOX SCHOOL VISITED AND DAMAGED BY BOYS.

The Knox school on the East Side was visited sometime between 6 o'clock last Saturday evening and 6 o'clock Monday morning, presumably by boys, and the furniture and interior of the school rooms were damaged to a considerable extent.

As the doors of the school house were locked when the janitor visited the school building Monday morning, preparatory to opening up for the day, and the windows were also securely locked, it is evident that the boys who gained admission were in possession of a key. The walls, blackboards and pictures in all four of the rooms were besmeared with ink, and other depredation were committed, the character of which could not be printed. Brooms, books, etc., were also gathered up in each of the rooms and set on fire. This fire was probably extinguished by the boys, as otherwise the school building would have been burned up.

The perpetrators of this act—and it is quite evident that it was done by boys old enough to know better—should be discovered and punished, and, if the school board is not able to ferret out the matter, a detective should be employed. The sooner such lawless actions are stopped, the better it will be for the schools, and incidentally for the taxpayers, who have to support them.

INDIAN TIMBER

IS THE SUBJECT OF DISCUSSION BY MINNESOTA DELEGATION

Senator Nelson, Congressmen Eddy and Morris and Secretary Hitchcock, of the Interior department, got together in Washington on Friday, and considered the pine question on Indian lands, and practically decided upon some changes. They are:

First, to do away with selling pine on the stump at public auction and estimating the timber in tracts.

Second, to sell the lumber in log on bank scale.

Third, to employ as much as possible Indian help.

To allow erection of saw mills on different parts of the reservation under such segulations as may be prescribed by the department.

These changes will be embodied in a bill which will be supported by the entire delegation, the general object being to reach some understanding that will, if possible, prevent further friction.

CHANGED TIME.

THE TRAIN NOW ARRIVES HERE AT 11:30.

The Great Northern on Monday changed the service upon this branch of the road, and the train now proceeds direct from Crookston to Thief River Falls and arrives here at 11:30, instead of 3:30, as heretofore. This is a decided improvement, and is greatly appreciated by all the citizens of this place. The change was brought about by a petition sent to the railroad and warehouse commissioners by Ira C. Richardson.

Clever Canadians.

A firm in Toronto, Ont., just made a pile of money by a clever advertising dodge. The advertised: "On receipt of $1, we will send, securely sealed, a beautifully bound book of 400 pages, full of good things. Every sport should have one. The most wonderful book ever written. French and English translation. Prohibited in some countries. Write at once."

The detective department, scenting the circulation of improper literature, sent a dollar and received a 15-cent Bible. They have not interfered with the sales, not caring to curtail the propagation of the gospel.

LOOKS VERY BAD.

PAULSON WILL PROBABLY BE CONVICTED OF MURDER.

A. W. Smith, chief of police of Fosston, was in the city again last week looking up evidence against the man who murdered a fourteen-year-old girl nine years ago in Pepin county, Wisconsin. It is understood that an excellent case is being made against this man, who was known here as an honest farmer. The story told by Chief Smith of the affair is as follows:

"Nine years ago, Erick Paulson was living near Pepin. In the same vicinity lived a man named Selden, who was of miserly habits, and who was commonly reputed to have a large quantity of gold secreted in his cellar. One day Selden went on a visit, taking his wife and children along, with the exception of his daughter, Sarah, 14 years of age.

"During their absence, John Paulson went to the Selden home and compelled the daughter to disclose the place where the old miser kept his money secreted. While in the cellar, Paulson realized that his detection and arrest would follow, and decided to obliterate all traces of it and all chances of exposure. He deliberately murdered the daughter, Sarah, by shooting her, and then, piling a quantity of wood upon the floor, he placed the girl's body upon it, saturated the place with kerosene and set fire to it. He was seen coming from the burning building, arrested and confessed the crime, the money he had secured, $1,000 in gold, being recovered from his person.

"In August, while awaiting the sitting of the court, Paulson broke jail and disappeared. Last April, while J. O. Hillard, relief agent of the Great Northern, was acting as agent of the company at Bagley, a man stepped up and asked for a ticket to Fosston. It was Paulson. Without turning an eyelash, Mr. Hillard took the money for the pasteboard, and, as soon as possible, notified the Fosston marshal to arrest him. This was done, and Paulson, who went by the name of Flynn, was taken back to Wisconsin.

"It was learned that, in an effort to loose himself, he had drifted into the wilds of eastern Marshall county, and had been successfully engaged in farming and stock raising. It is believed he had a partner in the crime, and his trial has been delayed in an effort to locate and arrest the man."

To Organize a Lodge.

John Mickleson has succeeded in securing eighteen candidates to become members of a Modern Woodmen lodge, which will be organized at Breese, Marshall county. The lodge will be instituted Monday evening, Feb. 4, and the local team will go up and do the work.

POPULATION

OF CITIES AND VILLAGES IN MINNESOTA UNDER 2,000.

The population of cities and villages in Minnesota having less than 2,000 has been announced. Below is given a few of the towns in the Thief River Falls class, together with the population in 1890 and 1900:

Thief River Falls	1,819	191
Ada	1,253	622
Aitkin	1,719	737
Argyle	829	306
Badger	162	...
Bagley	248	...
Cass Lake	546	...
Deer River	251	...
Fosston	864	207
Hallock	805	302
Red Lake Falls	1,885	774
Roseau	301	...
St. Hilaire	140	193
St. Vincent	256	...
Shevlin	172	...
Solway	177	...
Stephen	513	265
Warren	1,275	648

While the population of Thief River Falls was a disappointment to all, yet we have done very well for a city only about ten years old, and which has had a railroad running into it only eight years. The per cent of gain in population since 1890 of this city is greater than that of any other city in this section of the state, and the prospects for the future are brighter.

The population of St. Hilaire for 1900 is given as 140, and it is evidently a mistake, as St. Hilaire will probably reach nearly 1,000.

SIGNALS UNDER THE S.

A Submarine System Tested Near Boston.

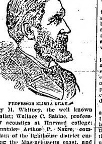
MARINE TELEGRAPH MINUS WIRE.

It Utilizes Sound of a Bell Carried Through the Water—Signals Have Been Sent Twelve Miles—Submarine Torpedo Boat's Presence May Be Learned by Its Use.

Boston begins the new century in the field of science by announcing to the world an invention as interesting in its way as Marconi's wireless telegraphy, with as wide a range of possibilities in its development, if the experiments that have been made with it to date hold good in practice, says the New York World. It is that of signaling under the sea, using the water as the medium for conveying sounds as Marconi uses the air.

By the system it has been already proved that a vessel can be warned of her approach to the coast when at least 12 miles off in storm or calm, while the approach of a steam vessel can easily be detected merely by her vibration at a distance of a mile and a half no matter how wild the weather or dark the night.

Among the prominent Bostonians who have seen the system operated are Henry M. Whitney, the well known capitalist; Wallace C. Sabine, professor of acoustics at Harvard college; Commander Arthur P. Nazro, commandant of the lighthouse district embracing the Massachusetts coast, and Captain Baker of the coastwise steamer H. F. Dimock. All are enthusiastic in praise of the device.



PROFESSOR ELISHA GRAY.

It is the invention of Arthur J. Mundy of a Boston publishing concern, working in conjunction with Professor Elisha Gray, the telephone inventor. It was suggested to him by his boyhood experience of the sound made by striking two stones together under water when he was in swimming. Not being an electrician, he wrote to Professor Gray, who is an old friend, then in Chicago, and asked for his judgment on it. Professor Gray was impressed by it and came to Boston and joined hands with Mr. Mundy to develop it. That was two years ago.

The last day of the old year and the century saw the first practical semipublic test of the system. A boat built like a scow, called the Sea Bell, had been fitted with a large bell and ringing apparatus and towed to a point on the coast off Winthrop and anchored, and the bell was lowered into the water through a well in her bottom. Then a party of well known men invited to witness the experiment were taken offshore in a steamer a distance of 12 miles. They were invited to listen at a receiver for sounds of the bell rung under water from the scow.

The results of the experiment are testified to by the party in a signed statement, in which they say: "At one and one-half miles the sound of the bell was heard very loud and very distinctly; at eight miles the sound was quite as distinct and almost as loud; at 12 miles the sound was heard at times quite distinctly and at times somewhat feebly. Even at 12 miles the sound received was sufficient to give a practicable warning signal."

The receiver used in the new system shows not only what the sound is, but whence it comes. On a coast equipped with bells at intervals of, say, 20 miles any mariner can pick out his position on the chart by taking the two angles from which the sound comes. The patent officials at Washington tell Mr. Mundy that he "has invented a new science."

The bell, with a mechanism for swinging the clapper, is lowered through a well hole 20 feet below the surface of the sea. It may be made to ring continuously as a church bell is tolled or any desired number of strokes at lesser or greater intervals, so that intelligible messages may be sent. It is obvious that instead of suspending the bell from a boat it may be suspended from a buoy. In such a case the electrical current would be brought to the bell from the shore by means of a submarine cable.

The simplest method for receiving the sound on board ship is to go below in the hold of the vessel as close to the keel as possible without any apparatus whatever and listen. By placing one end of a wooden rod against the side of the ship and the other end to the ear the sound is heard at even a greater distance. By means of a common tin ear trumpet the bell may be heard at a distance of three miles. For greater distances the inventors have constructed an electrical receiver.

Professor Gray has constructed a device by means of which a large gong may be rung automatically in the pilot house or any other part of a ship. Thus a bell may be submerged at some dangerous point like "Norman's Woe," and a vessel coming within two or three miles of it will be automatically warned of her danger.

It is proposed by the inventors to station along the coast at intervals of, say, ten miles a series of submerged bells to be thus rung electrically from a shore station. These bells will announce their identity by ringing each a different number, and their position will be charted.

It is of course obvious that by equipping ships with these sound producers and sound receivers intelligible messages may be sent back and forth either between ships or between ships and the shore, and vessels thus equipped may avoid collision by notifying each other of their approach and the direction of their course.

They can be used for detecting the approach of a submarine torpedo boat, the noise of which can be plainly heard at a distance of several miles, the sound being intensified by the fact that the submerged boat must transmit all its vibrations to the water which incloses it on all sides. Even small steam tugs on the surface of the water can be heard at a distance of two miles, the click of their machinery being distinctly audible.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

An Interesting Summarization of the Last Epoch.

Truly this last century of ours has been wonderful in its material advance, which is thus ably summarized by London Answers:

This century received from its predecessors the horse; we bequeath the bicycle, the locomotive and the motor car.

We received the goose quill; we bequeath the typewriter.

We received the scythe; we bequeath the mowing machine.

We received the hand printing press; we bequeath the cylinder press.

We received the painted canvas; we bequeath lithography, photography and color photography.

We received the hand loom; we bequeath the cotton and woolen factory.

We received gunpowder; we bequeath lyddite.

We received the tallow dip; we bequeath the electric lamp.

We received the galvanic battery; we bequeath the dynamo.

We received the flintlock; we bequeath Maxims.

We received the sailing ship; we bequeath the steamship.

We received the beacon signal fire; we bequeath the telephone and wireless telegraphy.

We received ordinary light; we bequeath Roentgen rays.

And all this on the purely material side, to say nothing of the progress in detail that has made this major progress possible—the advances in chemistry and metallurgy; the invention of machinery and its adaptation to manifold processes formerly considered too intricate for aught but patient work by hand. Beyond this is the scientific knowledge acquired and applied to the lives of the race: the explorations conducted and the new countries opened up to settlement and progress. In politics is found the growth of liberal institutions; the leaven of inherent rights of manhood has leavened the whole lump. And in art, in literature, in music, the advance throughout the whole social scale is incalculable.

Astronomical Trust Hard at Work.

About 50 of the principal observatories of the world, according to the publications of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific, are now co-operating in a great programme of observation for improving our knowledge of the distance between the earth and sun. Fully half the resources of the Lick observatory have been devoted to this work for two months past, and the observations will continue one or two months longer.

OUTLOOK FOR LABOR.

Better Times For Workingmen In Twentieth Century.

EDWIN MARKHAM'S OBSERVATIONS

In Answering the Following Questions the Well Known Poet States How the Condition of Laboring Men Can Be Bettered in the New Epoch. Influence of the Church.

[Copyright, 1900, The Christian Herald, New York.]

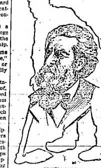
On what questions should all branches of labor unite for the good of the country?

On the reduction of hours of labor per day; on compulsory arbitration; on the study, from humane motives, of the co-operative ideal in industry.

In what way or toward what end should labor utilize its gigantic strength?



EDWIN MARKHAM.

They should resolutely will to come into harmony and unity of aim and aspiration; they should make appeal through the ballot box for an enlargement of the rights of man; they should strive to so organize the world as to keep open the gates of opportunity.

What opportunities should the new century bring to the workingman?

Security in his work and sufficient leisure from his work to give him time to cultivate his moral and æsthetic nature.

What effect, in your opinion, will great combinations of wealth have upon the workingman of the future? Will concentration of wealth, trusts, etc., prove a benefit or a drawback to the workingman's progress?

Great combinations of wealth will tend to make great counter combinations among the working classes. Trusts will be a decided drawback to the workingman's progress unless some means shall be found to make them serve the good of the whole people, as now they serve the good of a very few.

To what degree should the workingman be made a partner of wealth?

If I understand your question, he should be made a full partner. In other words, he should receive as nearly as possible the full value of the things he makes or does.

In one of your poems, "The Man Under the Stone," you compare a workingman to a man going through life pushing a great stone always up hill. What is the workingman's real burden? What is the real stone in his up hill life?

That great stone is his unequal struggle for bread today, still further weighted with fear of penury tomorrow and the dread of a destitute old age. All this, of course, springs out of the narrow margin of scant wage and precarious employment.

What kind of help, aside from higher wages, does the laboring man need?

He needs the contented mind that comes from security in his work and joy in his work. This necessarily carries the idea that he must have more leisure and more culture.

What would most help to lighten the toiler's burden?

Co-operation in the place of competition in the industrial world. Co-operation is the logic of Christianity.

How can the government best help the workingman?

As a first step, by assuming control of railroads, telegraphs, etc., and so moving wisely on toward government ownership of all industries which in private hands have become a menace to the public good and the public safety.

What should be done with the idle millions, with the great army of men who want work and yet can find nothing to do?

As first steps they might well be employed by cities and states at living wages upon public works. If enough work of that kind is not forthcoming, let the public powers establish shipyards and other industries sufficient in number to employ the willing hands. Of course, if we had a more effective organization of industry working time for the now idle could be found by cutting down the excessive hours now forced upon the overworked until every one has work.

Are strikes, which are really battles between workman and employer, helpful or harmful to the toiler?

As a rule they are harmful to the toiler, but at times they seem to be cruel necessities.

Would the toiler benefit if, instead of striking, he submitted his grievances to the general movement or to a labor department regulated by law and having a minister of labor in the president's cabinet? Would not this be a better way for the workingman for the settlement of differences between employer and employed?

Yes, labor should be represented in the cabinet by an intelligent laborer, not by a parlor farmer nor by a retired capitalist. The method you suggest of settling strikes would be a decided improvement upon the present haphazard plan.

"Their blind feet drift in the darkness, and no one is leading." What kind of leaders do the toilers need?

They need leaders with the white purity of a St. Francis and the iron resolution of a Cromwell, leaders whose watchword is "God and the people!" Such men were Joseph Mazzini and John Ruskin.

How can the church best help the "brother to the ox?" How reach him, lift him up?

By studying the anxious problems of economics and finding a way of applying the golden rule to industry.

And working women? Have we a "sister to the ox?" How should she be reached, uplifted, her burden lightened?

Yes, we have a "sister to the ox." Men and women rise and fall together. In general the same means that will lift and lighten man's burden will alleviate woman's also.

Do churches and church workers neglect the working people? Do they pay enough attention to factory centers and great industrial towns?

No; churches do not give enough attention to these matters. Indeed the burning question in each church today should be the social problem. The saving of men's souls is very closely connected with the amelioration of their social and industrial conditions. The church needs a new baptism of the holy spirit, which is the same as saying social spirit.

How to Prepare Eggs a la Tripe.

Boil eight eggs hard, chill in cold water, then remove shells and separate yolks and whites, keeping yolks entire. Shred the whites. Make a pint of bechamel sauce. Place the yolks of eggs in the middle of a heated dish and the shredded whites around them. Pour the boiling sauce over them and sprinkle a little minced parsley over the top. Garnish with fried croutons of toast points.

How to Relieve Rheumatism.

Chronic rheumatism is incurable. Much relief may be had by careful diet and treatment. Take a five grain tablet of citrate of lithia at meals. After meals take 20 drops in a wineglass of water of this mixture: Saturated solution of iodide of potash and wine of colchicum seed, each 30 grains. Avoid all intoxicants, vinegar, rich desserts, pickles and pastry.

REDUCED PRICES.

Before laying in a new line of goods for the spring, I will sell goods at very low prices, in order to clean up my present stock. Now is your opportunity to buy goods at prices never before heard of in this part of the country. It costs nothing to examine my goods. Come in and I will convince you that I can sell clothing, caps, shoes, underwear and gents' furnishings cheaper than any store in this town or surrounding towns.

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY,

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

There will be a large number of settlers coming to this part of the state next spring with a view of making this their future home. Most of them will be from southern Minnesota and Iowa, and they will be able to give the farmers around here numerous pointers upon successful farming. They are the kind we need, and will be welcomed.

There will not be much opposition to the passage of the drainage bill in the legislature this year, and this fact will be good news to the settlers of this section. A good system of drainage will make this the most productive portion of the state, and will insure the farmers against a crop failure.

No city in the northern part of the state has shown a greater growth than Thief River Falls. In 1890 we had a population of 191, while in June 1, 1900, we had 1,819. For a town that has never had a boom, Thief River Falls is doing pretty well.

Warning to School Officers.

Notices have been sent to the county superintendents of schools throughout the state warning them that a gang of swindlers is working amoung the school officers and teachers. The gang is using receipt and note forms, which bear the great seal of Minnesota, and letters of official endorsements, which purport to come from the officers of the state department of public instruction, and are probably forgeries. In Dodge county, agents visited the district schools, advertising the virtues of a set of books. Later a man took an order for the delivery of the books at a certain price, and, having received a voucher on the proper fund, discounted it at the nearest bank and disappeared. The books, upon arrival, were found to be cheap and uncopyrighted, worth about ten cents a volume. Steps have been taken to apprehend the men who are engaged in this work.

It's Not So.

One of the prominent men of Thief River Falls purchased a tool chest for his little boy, who seemed to have considerable mechanical genius. Up to date, the boy has sawed off two table legs, four knobs from the bureau, bored seven holes through the door and three in the piano case, and, by the aid of the glue pot, stuck the family napkins firmly to the parlor carpet.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

The Only American Girl to Marry a King.

But one American girl has ever married a king, and she, a New England woman, now a widow, is living in a royal palace in the country of her adoption, almost lost sight of by her American sisters and friends. The romance of this fascinating, gifted American girl, who won the hand and heart of a king—one of the prettiest of love stories—will be one of the features of the March Ladies' Home Journal.

"Sour Grapes."

Thief River Falls is credited with 1,819 people, which, we presume, includes all the Indians in the reservation.—Warren Sheaf.

COMMUTATION.

Bill Has Passed Both the House and Senate.

Representative Eddy has secured the passage of the senate bill to extend the commutation privilege to settlers on ceded Indian lands. It provides that the section of the revised statutes allowing homesteaders to commute their entries shall be extended to all homestead settlers who are affected by, or entitled to, the provisions of the free homes act. A provision is made that, in commuting their entries, such homesteaders shall pay the price provided in the laws under which the original entries were made. It will enable homesteaders on Chippewa lands in Minnesota and Sioux lands in South Dakota to commute their entries and obtain patents without having to remain on them for the five years required for settlers who do not commute.

World's Wheat Shortage.

Wheat has displayed considerable firmness, but no great soaring powers, during the past few days. Although the price is some 10 cents a bushel higher than it was at the corresponding date a year ago, the conviction seems to be growing that it is low enough. Most speculative values are much higher than they were then, and money is plentier; but over and above this is the estimate given out from Bremen that the world's crop of this cereal for 1900 shows a shortage of 300,000,000 bushels, as compared with the crop of 1899. The figures are compiled by Consul Diedrich, and the details are as follows: Russia, a reduction from 454,108,400 to 145,288,000 bushels; United States, a reduction from 552,095,093 to 497,123,811; British India, a reduction from 232,034,437 to 179,693,212; France, a reduction from 304,882,223 to 308,242,511; Germany, a reduction from 141,368,260 to 115,877,390.

If these figures are accurate, they furnish a good foundation for what is called a "bull" market—that is to say, a market of rising prices. But as present supplies at points of consumption are plentiful, the bullish motive may not become operative to any great extent until later in the season.—Minneapolis Tribune.

NEW CENTURY WOMAN.

Mrs. Sangster Says She Is to Be the Most Beautiful.

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, the well known writer, who addressed the West End Woman's club the other afternoon in the Madison street Y. M. C. A. building in Chicago on "The Outlook of the Twentieth Century Girl," spoke in part as follows, says the Chicago Times-Herald:

"The woman of the twentieth century is going to be the most beautiful woman that has ever lived. Great beauty comes from perfect health, and woman is going to be healthy because she will eat wholesome food, take plenty of exercise and wear sensible clothes. Tight lacing will become a relic of the past, and the comfortable golf shirt and loose dress will be in favor.

"There is a popular sentiment now in favor of women becoming self supporting, and it is a commendable one. It is a great thing for a woman to be independent, but it is only the second best thing. The best thing is to have a home of one's own to look after. But I do not believe in early marriages. I don't think a girl ought to get married before she is 25 years old. After she has come out of school she should enjoy a period of intimate home life with her parents. She should learn all the details of housekeeping and learn them well. And let me tell you right now that a bright girl can really learn almost everything about housekeeping in six weeks.

"Not only is the woman of the twentieth century going to be beautiful herself, but she is going to wear beautiful clothes. She is going to have the prettiest gowns that have ever been seen. It need not follow that her dresses will be extravagant and that she is going to ruin her husband by her extravagance, for that is far from my meaning. But her clothes are going to be dainty and artistic."

At the conclusion of the programme an informal reception was held.

OUR BOATS FOR THE THAMES

Swift American Steamers to Be Used Between Woolwich and Kew.

It is stated, according to a London cable to the New York Sun, that American capitalists will inaugurate on May 1 a service of high speed steamers on the Thames between Woolwich and Kew. Several British companies have already bankrupted themselves by operating inferior river boats, and for years the service has been the subject of much complaint.

The agent of the American capitalists, Mr. William Root, an attorney of New York, is now in London. He says that his principals are prepared to spend $2,000,000 in the scheme. He is now negotiating with the Thames conservancy board, which, controlling the traffic on the river, has frequently proved an obstructive body.

Concerning Education in Berlin.

Berlin has conceived a novel plan of furthering the right development of children, says Harper's Bazar. This provides for an interchange of city and country children. Thus the poorer classes of Berlin who cannot afford family outings are enabled to send their children to the country, and in exchange they receive the children from the country home, who thus are provided with the liberal education town life affords. Reciprocal selfish interest in their own prompts considerate treatment of the visiting children in each home. The plan works so successfully the intention now is to extend it and make it international, establishing an exchange of children between different countries. The question arises in the American mind, Why have homes at all under this system? Turn children over to state institutions and let the work of modern education merrily proceed without the slightest obstacle which preservation of the family ideal imposes.

PERSIA RIPE FOR OUR TRADE

Her Representative at Washington Working Toward That End.

"It required the aid of a French interpreter for me to carry on an interview with General Isaac Khan, the newly arrived Persian minister, says a writer in The National Magazine for January. Isaac Khan Mofakhamed Douley is a handsome, stalwart bachelor of 45, with black eyes, swarthy face and manners gentle as a woman. He is delighted with America and tried his few words of accumulated English on me. He is intensely interested in American industrial development and especially in the patent office, which is a department as yet unknown to the Persian government. He is the first representative sent by the shah to the United States for over ten years. The former minister returned to Persia in a huff, under the fire of fun poked at him because of his expanded Persian name.

The wits will not drive General Khan away in this manner. He is made of sterner stuff. All the Persian people now dress in European fashion, except some of the lower classes. They have telephones, telegraphs, railroads and department stores. He was much pleased to see the Persian flag and the stars and stripes intwined over the head of the president during the centennial celebration and insisted that, although the trade of Persia is now monopolized by Europe, it will not be long before America will have a good share of it.

CARE OF MEN'S CLOTHING.

How to Renovate It When It Shows Signs of Shabbiness.

When partly worn suits are properly mended and renovated, it greatly improves their appearance and makes them last much longer than if this work is neglected. When the back of the coat becomes shiny, sponge it well, lay a cloth over it and iron it dry. Place a piece of thin, firm goods under three cornered tears and tiny breaks when they occur and darn the edges down to it. When the edges of the coat or vest become worn, remove the braid, if there is any, and replace it with new. The back of the vest often wears out before the rest of the garment, and when such is the case remove the old back, press it carefully and use it as a pattern to cut the new one by. You can see how to put it in by examining a new vest. The corners of the pockets should be sewed back in place as soon as they begin to tear down.

A thorough brushing and cleaning are often necessary, but many cleaning fluids contain strong drugs which are neither necessary nor advisable for this purpose, as they often fade the cloth. The following is a very simple and effective method of cleaning coat collars and removing soiled spots from woolen clothing: Prepare a strong, foamy suds by dissolving pearline in hot water, dip a clean, stiff brush in it and scrub the soiled portion with it. An old toothbrush that has been discarded for toilet purposes is good for this work. Dip it in frequently, changing the suds for a clean one whenever it gets dirty. When the spots are removed, scrub with clean water and hang it up until dry enough to iron. Press it on the wrong side or if that is not convenient cover the right side with a cloth and iron until perfectly dry.

SUEZ CANAL TO BE WIDENED

Engineering Scheme For This Purpose Maturing In London.

The Suez canal is to be deepened and widened if Mr. Linden W. Bates, the London hydraulic engineer who is now at Suez, reports that the work can be done within a reasonable figure, says the London Express. The canal company hopes that the great waterway can be enlarged by the use of dredges, which are comparatively inexpensive. There is great need of more room in the channel, for ships have been growing ever greater, while the canal has remained unchanged.

Mr. Bates, who is now going over the canal, is en route to Queensland, for whose government he has built three colossal dredges on the Tyne. These are to be used in clearing the harbors of Queensland of mud and detritus. The largest of the trio is the Hercules, a seagoing dredge of 5,000 horsepower, and by permission of the Queensland government it will be held in the canal for a time and experiments made under the direction of Mr. Bates. If it proves that dredging is a satisfactory method of enlarging the waterway between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean, the Suez Canal company will proceed forthwith to arrange for improvement on a large scale.

Both the war office and the colonial office are concerned in the enlargement of the canal, and the request made to Mr. Bates to go to Suez was indorsed by the latter department.

How to Make Marshmallow Cake.

Beat together to a cream half a cup of butter and one and a half cups of sugar. Sift two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, with three cupfuls of sifted flour three times. Now add the flour and three-quarters of a cupful of water alternating. Then fold in carefully the stiffly beaten whites of four eggs. Bake in two or three layers. For the filling boil two cupfuls of sugar with one cupful of water until it ropes. Just before taking from the fire stir in half a pound of marshmallows broken in small pieces. When melted, pour this sirup gradually into the well beaten whites of two eggs and beat continuously until thick and cold.

How to Cure Black Heads.

Scrub the face every night with resorcin and salicylic acid soap and hot water, using a fine face brush. Dry the face with a soft damask towel. Then rub some of this ointment gently over the face and go to bed: White precipitate, 3 decigrams; boric acid, 2 grams; lanolin, up to 30 grams. Squeeze out large black heads with a clean watch key dipped in alcohol. A safe rule to follow is never to squeeze or handle a black head which cannot be plainly seen in a mirror held three feet distant from the face.

How to Broil Bear Steaks.

Have one and a half pounds cut from a young animal, as old bear meat is hard and tough and is only palatable in a highly seasoned ragout. The steaks should be three-quarters of an inch thick, season with a rounding teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper, broil like beefsteak and serve hot on hot plates with barberry or wild plum jelly. This game resembles pork in flavor.

Galveston Revived.

Galveston is fulfilling the predictions made at the time of the calamitous deluge last summer by rapidly increasing its material and commercial importance, says the St. Louis Republic. In the month of November, 1900, the export trade from Galveston amounted to $25,000,000, or $1,000,000 more than the exports in November, 1899.

Shaw's Pure Malt is no doctored compound, but a pure, wholesome and strengthening stimulant. Especially commended for medicinal purposes. Sold by Morgan & Brink, Thief River Falls, Minn.

J. W. Shields, of Hallock, is having lots of fine sport and is making money besides on his greyhounds. Up to date, he has killed 27 wolves this season, and has only started the game. The amount paid by that county for wolf bounty during the year 1900 is $1,359.

M. C. Harlow, the real estate dealer, during the past week purchased the August Lind farm, six miles southwest of here, and the Wm. Reed farm, nine miles northwest of town. Mr. Harlow has a large list of wild and improved lands in this section and is expecting a number of parties up from Iowa in the spring, who will buy farms and reside here.

H. Faut will commence the building of the local telephone exchange at once. The telephone poles are now here.

If you want to file on a piece of government land it will not be necessary to go to Crookston. Make your filing in Thief River Falls before L. G. Browning, U. S. commissioner for the district of Minnesota.

County Attorney Grady, of Red Lake Falls, passed through the city today, returning from Elkton, S. D., where he was called by the illness of a sister. He reached there a few hours after her death.—Crookston Times, Jan. 26.

Fred Rolette was arrested last week by two Indian policemen and taken to the Agency, charged with taking green wood off of the reservation. Fred, however, succeeded in convincing the agent that he was hauling only "dead and down," and was released.

Herb Fuller came in from Thief River Falls, where he has made a brief visit to his family, and was assigned to duty on the mail car that runs to St. Vincent and Fargo, in place of Mr. Thomas, who injured a hand and is taking enforced lay off.—Crookston Times.

Knute Steen, of Wyandotte, was circulating a petition in the city Tuesday for aid in the construction of a new church on section 17, in his township. He met with a liberal response. Rev. J. T. Anstad, of Thief River Falls, will be the pastor of the new congregation.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

C. J. Brooks, traveling passenger agent for the Great Western, was in the city the first of the week making arrangements to sell tickets to the Robbecke-Kretzschmar party that will make a tour of the western and southern part of the United States during the latter part of February and March.

Settlers in the town of Rollis, eastern Marshall county, got out last fall and spent several days fighting a prairie fire started by some miscreant. The county is supposed to pay for such work, but, when the bills were rendered, they were cut down to from 70 to 85 per cent, and the settlers are roaring like a blizzard.

The annual report of Dairy Commissioner Bowler for the year 1900 shows the following facts: There are in the state 582 creameries, which have handled 972,799,000 pounds of milk, making therefrom 44,007,933 pounds of butter; $6,959,914.55 have been paid to patrons for milk, and $930,739.35 have been paid for operating expenses. The average price paid for milk per hundred pounds is 68 6-10 cents, and the average price paid for butter per pound is 17½ cents.

Another Real Estate Office.

Ed. Healey and Chas. N. Bourdon were in the city last week from Red Lake Falls and, while here, made arrangements to open up a real estate office in Thief River Falls. The office will be in charge of M. K. Wall, of this city, and Mr. Bourdon. They have a number of farms in this vicinity that will be placed upon the market at once.

Closing Out.

James Meehan, Jr., offers for sale cheap two store buildings, his residence, one small dwelling house, one lot on LaBree avenue, centrally located, and sixty lots in Meehan's addition. This property will be sold cheap to cash purchasers, as Mr. Meehan intends to leave for the west as soon as he disposes of his property. Now is the time for people who intend to remain here to invest in good paying property at a price that is sure to be a good paying investment.

Where His "Good Road" Leads.

The Leon correspondent of the Bemidji Pioneer goes after one of his neighbors in this sarcastic strain: "This town has a fellow who never eats a chunk of bread before he thanks his Maker for it, nor never goes to bed unless he makes a prayer. This fellow said in one of his prayers last week that he hoped God would give him strength to fulfill the good work he is doing and that he would let him travel on a good road. This fellow is stealing timber from the school land and the good road leads down to the saw mill."

To Help the Farmers.

State aid to farmers who lost their crops through the drouth of 1900, during the growing time of their cereals, is asked in a bill introduced in the senate by J. H. Smith, appropriating $75,000 as a fund from which the state may make seed grain loans. In some sections of the state the losses of crops were heavy, and many farmers will have difficulty in replanting their lands without help.

AFTER SETTLERS

For Cutting Timber from Their Claims.

The following appeared in the Minneapolis Tribune last week, and will be of interest to the people of this vicinity, many of whom are interested. It is not thought, however, that anything can be done to the settlers who have cut timber with the view of improving their lands. The article in the Tribune is as follows:

"Anonymous reports have been sent into the land office department at Washington, charging a large number of settlers upon the Red Lake Indian reservation with cutting and selling timber from their homestead claims, and an investigation has been ordered with a view of compelling the lumbermen who purchased the logs to refund. Under the Nelson law the government was required to estimate the timber on these lands in all cases where 15,000 feet or more could be found on a tract of 40 acres. Three corps of estimators failed to discover sufficient timber on these homestead entries to make an estimate, and they were classed as agricultural lands. The settlers claim, under these circumstances, the right to cut and sell the timber they find upon their claims for the purpose of improving them. As all of the lumbermen in this section have bought more or less of such logs, an interesting time may be expected.

HE IS IN TROUBLE.

S. Bisazza, Former Resident of This City, Short $10,000.

Trustees of the bankrupt stock of Spiro Bisazza, of Crookston, and formerly of this city, find that the books that have been kept in managing the business show a sum aggregating $10,000 that has not been accounted for, and which, they declare, must be in his possession. The facts, they claim, indicate that he has taken it out of his business, and Referee Vaule has set February 6th as a date for hearing in the matter.

District Poorhouses Proposed.

Senator McCarthy introduced a bill in the senate providing for the adoption of the district poorhouse plan in use in several other states, by which several counties may join in erecting a single institution for their paupers. The bill authorizes district poorhouses where the counties have more than 10,000 population.

The plan is one which has received the approval of the state board of corrections and charities. It has been recommended for several localities in the southern part of the state, where adjoining counties are maintaining separate institutions, each with but few inmates. The provisions of the measure introduced are those approved by the state board.

Dissolution of Partnership.

The partnership heretofore existing under the firm name and style of Mullarky & Hansen, wherein W. T. Mullarky and K. M. Hansen, both of the city of Thief River Falls, were general partners, is this 31st day of December, A. D. 1900, dissolved by mutual consent.

Mr. K. M. Hansen will settle all debts due the said late firm, and all debts due the said late firm must be paid to W. T. Mullarky or his collecting agent, the said K. M. Hansen.

Has Sold His Practice.

Negotiations were completed this week by which the stand, practice and good will of Van R. Brown, ex-county attorney, were transferred to Messrs. Germo & McIntyre, Mr. Brown having accepted the attorneyship for the L. P. Strong loan and real estate company, of Niche, N. D., for which point he departed yesterday. Mrs. Brown and the children will follow in the early spring, when they will make their permanent home in Pembina county.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

DRAINAGE BILL

Introduced by Senator Myron and Representative Berg.

An appropriation of $100,000, to be expended on the drainage of swamp lands and reclaiming shallow lakes, has been asked in the bill introduced by Senator O. H. Myron, of Ada, in the senate and Mr. Berg, of Roseau county, in the house. The benefits to be derived from it, as urged by its advocates, are not confined to any one portion of the state. The money asked is considered in the light of an investment by the state for the purpose of making waste lands productive of taxes, and it is expected that the bill will pass without serious opposition.

The bill will provide for the distribution of the appropriation by a commission to consist of the governor, the secretary of state, the state auditor and possibly a drainage expert. Applications for apportionment under the appropriation are to be made by the various county boards to the commission. The commission is to investigate, or cause to be investigated, the needs of the counties represented by its applicants and make awards proportioned upon the relative needs of other counties.

The money awarded is to be expended by the several counties within their own borders, and under the supervision of the local officials.

In the northern part of the state there are large tracts of land, the title to which is vested in the state and private individuals, that are absolutely waste and unproductive of taxes. This is especially true in Beltrami, Red Lake, Roseau and Kandiyohi counties. In Beltrami county a tract known as the Lost River contains thousands of acres of which the top soil, varying from one to five or six feet in depth, is a mere shell over an immense body of water. The promoters of the drainage scheme claim this land may be reclaimed at an expenditure of not to exceed $4,000 or $5,000. The value of the reclaimed tract would, it is claimed, at once compensate the state for the entire amount of the appropriation asked.

IN THE CORN BELT

What an Iowa Man Says of This Section.

"The way they talked about raising corn made me think of old times," said an Iowa farmer, who has been spending several weeks in the Red river valley, to a reporter of the Minneapolis Journal. "There was a time when Iowa was raising wheat principally, and in northern Iowa especially they had the idea that corn could not be raised successfully. That idea is gone. Southern Minnesota went through the same experience of doubt, and is now raising good corn. Northern Minnesota is gradually increasing its corn acreage. But in the Red river valley they will tell you that they cannot raise corn. I predict that it will not be many years before northern Minnesota will be producing a good grade of corn, and plenty of it."

Bad Whiskey.

The following is taken from the Thief River Falls correspondence in the Crookston Journal:

"Last Monday night Ed Dieder, a man residing in the First ward, was found lying in a helpless condition in front of the Cash store. M. Bothun, the proprietor, secured assistance, carried him into the store and sent for Drs. Francis and Tupper. After an examination, it was found to be a case of poisoning. The physicians succeeded in resuscitating him, and as soon as the man could explain, he said that he had taken two drinks of what he supposed was whiskey, in one of the saloons, and had barely swallowed it when he began to feel cramps. He at once started for home, but lost consciousness and was found as stated above. He has the prompt action of Mr. Bothun and the doctors to thank for still being among the living."

AMONG THE RAILROADS.

Interview With Driver of the Calais-Paris Express.

THE NEW THIRD RAIL SYSTEM.

Private Trial on the Baltimore and Ohio of the Murphy Invention—Remarkable Feature of the Device Explained by the Inventor—New Railway in India.

An English journalist gives the following account of his interview with the driver of "the fastest train in the world," the Calais-Paris express, says the London correspondent of the New York Sun:

"Ninety-seven kilometers (about 60.2 miles) an hour," said the driver, "is my lowest speed over the 330 kilometers between here (Calais) and Paris. On the level stretch after Boulogne and before Abbeville I run generally up to 100 kilometers an hour. M'sieur, sitting in the luncheon car, cannot know what such a speed means. On the engine the vibration is so terrific that I have had a special wooden platform made to prevent the contusions of legs and arms I used to constantly sustain. Every joint in the metals causes the engine to jump, sometimes so much that any one but a locomotive driver would be frightened. You have no such speed on your English railways, I have heard.

"There's only one dangerous spot. Just before going in Boulogne there's a nasty curve, which sometimes causes the restaurant car to swing, but the train is so heavy that there is really no danger. It is only unpleasant for the passengers, who, because the plates upset, often think that we are about to leave the rails and take a trip across the country. Since the disaster down at Dax the other day, however, the company has given me strictest orders to report any inequality of the line and make any suggestions I wish to secure the most perfect safety. Yes; I could run the whole way into Paris if it were not for water, which I am compelled to take in at Abbeville.

"Cool head? Certainly, m'sieur, but you see, it is habit. I ran the new engine the other day on a trial trip from Calais to Paris with merchandise and got up to 111 kilometers an hour. I would have gone quicker, but signals were unfortunately against me. As it is, I am doing the run to Paris daily without varying five minutes in arrival, but when those new engines are put on the service will be accelerated by fully half an hour—that is, if your Chatham and southeastern trains keep time. I have been told they are very slow—are they, m'sieur?"

An invention which it is believed will supplant all previously invented third rail systems and revolutionize railroad traffic was successfully tested at Baltimore the other day in the tunnel of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

It is the Murphy safety sectional third rail system, the invention of Captain J. McLeod Murphy of Torrington, Conn., says the New York Journal. For the past six months Captain Murphy has been at work with a force of men, installing the system at his own risk. The contract was that he was to take it out if it did not prove successful. W. D. Young, chief engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio, and two assistant engineers of the same company, who witnessed the test, were all thoroughly satisfied.

The most remarkable feature of Captain Murphy's invention is that the charged sections of the third rail are always under the car or motor, and in front and rear of the car the third rail may be walked on or handled without the slightest danger. The inventor thus explains how this feat is accomplished:

"The motorman opening the controller to the first notch automatically communicates with the air tank carried on the locomotive as a storage reservoir for compressed air, which operates the brakes. The compressed air tank immediately gives the power to the air engines, which in turn operates an electric generator which generates current sufficient to pick up a switch which charges the third rail with current from the power house. This current passes from the switch to the third rail, to the shoe, to the electric generator, which automatically becomes a motor, and through the substitution of two valves in the air engine also becomes a compressor and charges the air tanks from which it originally got its motive power.

"Thus at no time during the operation of a car over this system is it possible to have a charged conductor or third rail except when the motorman has opened a controller. Hence, should a person even fall beneath a car and the motorman quickly throw the controller closed there would not be the slightest danger from injury by electricity. There is no possibility of the third rail in front or rear of the car while the car is in motion becoming charged. It lies on the ground as harmless, so far as electricity is concerned, as any car track on any system."

According to a Calcutta correspondent the Shadipalli-Balotra railroad has been opened for traffic. It is an extension of the Haidarabad-Shadipalli line opened in 1898. The new line, which is of one meter gauge, connects the Jodhpore-Bickaneer and Rajputana lines with the northwestern system, starting from Kurrachee. The railway is 190 miles long, which, with the 60 miles from Haidarabad to Shadipalli, makes a total length of 250 miles.

Wilhelmina's Wedding Gift of Furniture.

Among the many wedding gifts being prepared for the queen of Holland one of the most interesting is the suit of drawing room furniture that the Amsterdam women of rank are embroidering, says the New York Tribune. There will be 12 chairs, 6 stools, a sofa and 2 chairs of state. Each piece is the gift of an individual. The materials and many of the designs were chosen in Brussels.

Unconquerable While Alive.

The difficulty with the Boers is that they are perfectly willing to be killed in the cause they have espoused, and when a man is in that state of mind he never knows when he is whipped, says the New York Herald. For that matter, he never is whipped until he is dead.

How to Cook Potatoes Southern Style.

Take a large tablespoon of lard and butter and let heat in a stewpan or small kettle. When hot stir in a large tablespoon of flour. Stir until smooth, then add a medium sized onion cut small. Cook for one minute or until brown. Then stir in a quart of potato dice previously prepared. Add sufficient boiling water to cook the potatoes, not quite enough to cover them. Put a lid on the kettle and let cook until the potatoes are done through and the water has boiled quite away.

How to Make Cranberry Potpie.

Butter a porcelain stewpan or kettle. Put in a pint of berries sprinkled with a cup of sugar. Make a pint of biscuit dough, shape into a large ring and lay on the fruit in the kettle. Then pour another pint of berries into and around the cup of dough, adding another cup of sugar. Pour one pint of boiling water into the center, cover closely and stew steadily for 20 minutes. When done, turn from the kettle on to a platter. Serve with cream and sugar.

How to Make Maryland Mush.

Sprinkle gradually three-fourths pint of Indian (corn) meal into one quart of boiling water previously salted with a large teaspoonful of salt; allow it to boil half an hour. Drain one pint of oysters of their liquor and stir them into the mush; allow ten minutes longer, then pour the mixture into a square mold or a baking powder can which has been wet in cold water. Cut in neat slices in the morning and fry.

How to Make Raised Corn Bread.

Scald two cupfuls of cornmeal with one cup of boiling water and let it stand for ten minutes. Add one cup of cold water, half a cup of molasses, two cupfuls of graham flour, half a cupful of yeast, half a teaspoonful of salt and half a teaspoonful of soda. Beat thoroughly, pour into buttered pans and stand in a warm place over night. In the morning bake in rather slow oven.

How to Make Hickory Nut Cake.

One and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of butter, three-quarters of a cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of flour, one-half cupful of chopped nuts, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, the beaten whites of four eggs and one teaspoonful of vanilla.

Wilhelmina's Wedding Landau.

The marriage landau of the queen of the Netherlands is on exhibition on the premises of a carriage builder in the Boulevard Haussmann in Paris. It has been sent thither to be relined, but has already been used by her majesty Wilhelmina on a few state occasions, says the New York Tribune. It is painted in cream color, "Vernis Martin," of great purity of tint. The box seat, the springs and the hubs of the wheels are of a rich orange, the new linings are of white brocade, and the queen will, they say, have eight white horses, with orange colored trappings, to take her to church on her wedding day.

FLAMMARION ON MARS.

Famous Astronomer Says the Planet Signaled Us Long Ago.

ENVIES LOT OF ITS INHABITANTS.

Probably Tried Signaling Thousands of Years Back and, Getting No Reply, Gave Us Up as Vulgar and Ignorant—Views of Wilfred de Fonvielle and Dorothea Klumpke.

Camille Flammarion, the astronomer, gave to the New York Journal the following synopsis of his remarks delivered in an address before the Astronomical Society of France, which met the other day in Paris to discuss the alleged Mars signaling. He said:

"There is no controversy with the distinguished American astronomers, Lowell and Douglass, who recently sent a dispatch about the luminous projections observed in the planet. I do not think these are signals made to us by the inhabitants of Mars. They are atmospheric phenomena. If the inhabitants of Mars had wished to signal to us, they would have done so long ago. They are much older than we of the earth. We have not yet reached the age of discretion, as may be seen by a visit to the parliaments at Paris, Rome, Washington or elsewhere.

"The inhabitants of Mars are millions of years more advanced than we, and had they any desire to communicate with us they would have long ago done so and, receiving no reply, would have set us down as vulgar beings not interested in their planet, so why should they continue to interrogate people who do not answer? They have long since judged us.

"Moreover, they would have selected the proper time to signal us—namely, when Mars presents its nonluminous disk toward the earth. I envy the lot of the inhabitants of Mars, the beautiful earth of heaven, without storms or cyclones and years twice as long as here. An object weighing 200 pounds here would weigh about 72 there. Everything is lighter, more delicate, more refined. Millions of years may lift us to its perfection.

"I believe there is an organized humanity dominating the forces of nature throughout the whole planet for the benefit of its inhabitants."

Wilfred de Fonvielle, member of the Astronomical Society of France, says: "The luminous projections observed are undoubtedly signals from the inhabitants of Mars to us. A line of bright lights several hundred miles long has been observed on the border of Lake Icaria. These gigantic illuminations continued 70 minutes and vanished suddenly. Light never follows geometric lines, and the rectilinear disposition of the illumination mentioned indicates the action of intelligent agents.

"Simultaneous illumination has furnished a like argument; hence the projections were signals of the inhabitants to us and consequently sure to be repeated. We ought to observe Mars closely from now till Feb. 22, when it will be in opposition."

Dorothea Klumpke says: "The body of Mars is not very luminous, and the eye has to be trained. Imagination must not be permitted to carry the eye away. The astronomers at the Arizona observatory are very advanced, and imagination may have played a part, though Mars should be the first planet with which we shall be able to communicate. Mars will be the first to give us a true knowledge of life beyond the earth, as it was the first to lead Kepler to the truth about the solar system.

"The projections are astronomical phenomena, not signals from the inhabitants. Mars is doubtless inhabited by a superior race, and I see probability in Kant's theory that we may be transmitted to other planets for another life."

A PINEAPPLE TRUST.

Growers of the Fruit to Consolidate in Florida.

There will soon meet in Tampa, Fla., one of the most interesting gatherings ever held in that city. All the pineapple growers of south Florida will assemble there in a few days. The purpose of the gathering will be to form what will be practically a pineapple growers' trust which will control the product of shedded pineapples in Florida, says the Tampa Tribune. The movement got its first impetus from the organization of the South Florida Pineapple association of St. Petersburg. Seeing the benefits already derived, the organization will be extended to include the owner of every pineapple shed in the state.

The same method of consolidation was effected last year by the fishery interests of the state, and the Florida Fish and Ice company was organized, controlling the catch of these waters. When the pineapple trust is formed, every man who raises a pineapple in the state will ship his product to the central depot of the company in Tampa, and shipments to the markets will be made from that depot exclusively.

MINNESOTA WILL LOSE NOTHING.

The advocates of the national park in northern Minnesota are now bending their energies to the appointment of a congressional committee to investigate the matter. The points for and against the park can then be brought out, and the next congress will have something official to work with. There are indeed many obstacles in the way, but most of them are but rotten stumps, which the axe of investigation can speedily remove.

Before 800,000 acres of land can be set aside for a reserve, some one will have to show our northern towns that the land is not of the kind which will be of agricultural service for our development. To permanently bar from settlement such a large tract of arable land would be a misfortune rather than a blessing. But the fact is patent that a large portion of said tract can be selected which is only adapted to timber culture and the raising of frogs and fleas. And there is enough water surface, unfarmable, to go a long way towards furnishing the park area. It will not be necessary that the land should all be contiguous. The tracts can lie miles apart, yet be connected by government roads. Such roads would be a great benefit to this new country.

The park scheme is a good one, from cellar to garret. Barring all selfish arguments, the nation needs it.

The Yellowstone park was fortunately wrested from the hands of private speculators thirty years ago, but the whole country needs another park of entirely different character. Minnesota will lose nothing by being as generous as those western states which submitted to an amputation that the world might forever enjoy the wonders of Yellowstone park.

A Big Store.

Fertile is to have a department store, which will be something new and novel in this section of the state. The idea is to be able to supply customers with anything that they may demand, from a stock of candy to a spool of thread to a steam threshing outfit, or the materials for the construction of a house, and where anything that the farmers have to sell will be bought for cash at such prices as the market will warrant. It is proposed to run an elevator in connection with the store, and an effort will be made to pay the top price for wheat at all times, with the idea of drawing farmers to the village.

Dakota Has Grown.

Thirty years ago there were less than 50 white families in North Dakota, and settlement had just commenced to enter the valley on the Minnesota side. Not more than half a dozen townships had been surveyed in North Dakota, and not a foot of land had passed from the government in North Dakota to private hands. The census of 1880 showed but 35,000 inhabitants in North Dakota, that of 1890 but 182,000, while the census of 1900 319,000, an increase of 75 per cent.—Grand Forks Herald.

HARD LUCK STORY

Told By a Resident of Roseau County.

Letters received by friends in the city from Isaac Sanders, of Warroad, tell a hard luck story that causes them much regret.

Sanders was comfortably located on the Cooke farm, three miles north of Crookston, but last spring secured a claim near Warroad and removed there, taking with him his household effects, a team and some horned stock. He built a shack after the usual pattern and started to clear some land. Five acres were planted to potatoes and a garden made, and Mr. Sanders prepared to put up some hay for the winter's stock feed.

The rainy season set in, and the result was the loss of everything in the way of crops and hay. Not one bushel of potatoes was harvested, and the only thing secured from the garden was a half bushel of onions.

Starvation was staring his stock in the face, and, as the other settlers were in the same condition as himself, he was compelled to kill his horses, preferring to do so rather than to let them starve. His cattle were slaughtered, and this furnished him with a winter's supply of meat and some to dispose of, which enabled him to purchase flour.

Mr. Sanders is now engaged in fishing, and several shipments of wall-eyed pike have reached the city, from which he is deriving considerable revenue.

Mr. Sanders is of the opinion that the man who is located upon a Polk county farm, even as a tenant, is a king in comparison to the condition he will find himself in an attempt to pioneer in the country where he has struck such hard luck.—Crookston Times.

An Assignment.

Joe Hollan, a general merchant, who has been doing a small business here, has made application to be declared a bankrupt.

Injury to Country Towns.

Farmers and townspeople who send to St. Louis or Chicago for the goods catalogued or advertised by the department stores are striking a blow at the prosperity of the country towns. In most cases they can buy just as cheaply at home, and the home dealers can be found if the article is not right. The home dealer helps pay the local taxes, and he and the people of the country towns make a market for farm produce. The larger the country towns become, the better the market is made for the farm—a market which does not waste the prices received in paying railroad freights to the city. Doing one's shopping in St. Louis or Chicago means the concentration of business in the hands of a few overgrown concerns. It means also ruin to business in the country towns, and will end in loss of population and loss of valuation of property.

The country towns should be encouraged, not starved out.

Not Good for Horses.

The farmers in the vicinity of Barnesville are complaining to a great extent of the bad effects of feeding flax-straw to their horses. In some instances where it is fed the animals are taken with a breaking out of sores and swelling of the abdomen, and where the animal is allowed to continue on the feed, it sickens and dies. The authorities are advising the farmers to feed their flax straw to their horned stock and let the horses have the oat straw.

WILL SAVE GAME.

Warden Fullerton Will Be Severe With Game Slayers.

Samuel F. Fullerton, executive agent of the new state game and fish commission, will make an active campaign against violators of the law. Said he:

"The commission has instructed me to spare no one. I am going to proceed vigorously against the indiscriminate killing of deer and moose in the lumber camps. The big lumbermen have an idea that they can supply their camps with meat more economically by hiring men to kill deer and moose than by buying beef and pork. We propose to see to it that this practice is stopped. Lumbermen with money will get the same treatment as lumber jacks, and all will be given the full extent of the law, which imposes a $50 fine for the illegal killing of a moose or deer. There are plenty of moose in Minnesota for all time to come, if they are only taken care of."

A Woman Buffalo Herder.

"Mrs. Harry A. Goodnight, of Goodnight, Texas, enjoys the distinction of being the only woman in the world who owns a herd of buffaloes. There are one hundred in the herd, more than half of which are pure bred, the remainder being 'cataloes,' as a cross between a buffalo and a Galloway cow is called," writes E. J. Davison in the February Ladies' Home Journal. "The cataloes have the same hump as the buffaloes, and shaggy hair, but their color varies from jet black to light brown, and they are most readily distinguished from the pure bred by their horns, which are longer. The cataloes are much more tractable, and can soon be taught to eat out of one's hand. But the fool blood buffaloes—of the Goodnight herd at least—never repose full confidence in man. Big and powerful as they are, they are timid and run away at the slightest alarm, although they have taken food from their owner's hand from the opposite side of a fence; nor will they attack unless wounded or driven into close quarters. Even with this reputation for timidity, Mrs. Goodnight does not regard the pure bred buffaloes as trustworthy, and does not consider it safe to go among them on foot. Mrs. Goodnight also has a herd of fifteen elks. In the great park, two square miles in area, each animal herds with its kind. Even the pure blood buffalo looks with a royal contempt upon his plebeian half-brother, the catalo, and the two keep wide apart in separate and distinct groups.

Vote on It Again.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature to again submit to a vote the proposed constitutional amendment allowing larger loans of school funds to local districts. This question was voted on at the last election, resulting 180,000 in favor and 30,000 against, but, as it requires a majority of all the votes at an election to carry, the amendment was lost. Some 200,000 voters failed to vote on the question. The proposed change is a good one, and is sure to carry another time.

Reservation Logging.

A telegram from Bagley says that Ole Erickson, one of the purchasers of pine land on the White Earth reservation, sold Nov. 27, 1900, did not adhere to instructions from the Crookston land office, not to take possession until the sale was confirmed. The consequence is that a special agent has stopped his logging operations.

POISONED.

The Wold Case Will Be Investigated.

The News readers will recall the accounts published in this paper last November of the death of a daughter of John Wold, a Marshall county farmer living in the town of Excel, and the fact that the father of the dead girl, who was believed to be insane, would not permit any of his neighbors to enter the house.

To increase the doubt surrounding this young woman's death, it was recalled that three years ago Mrs. Wold, the mother of the girl, died under similarly mysterious conditions, and that last June the oldest daughter also died with startling suddenness.

Mrs. Wold's death was believed at that time to have resulted from heart disease, though she was not known to have had a weak heart. In her case there was no autopsy.

After the last daughter died, four deputy sheriffs went out from Warren, captured Wold and brought him and the corpse of the girl to that place, but, after an examination, Wold was discharged, as it was claimed by County Attorney Stanton, after going over the evidence and further examining the prisoner, that it would be impossible to secure a conviction. It was also decided that he had not developed a degree of insanity that would warrant action being taken to confine him in the asylum.

This, however, did not satisfy Dr. Bratrud, the well known physician of Warren, and he sent the stomach of the dead girl for analysis to Prof. Hubert Carel, of the state university. The result was a discovery of antimony in quantity sufficient to cause death.

Antimony is a poison which could not possibly enter the stomach in any food form, and the analysis seems to demonstrate beyond a peradventure that the poisonous substance must have been administered with murderous or suicidal intent.

The young girl, Augusta Wold, who died in November, was seen by the neighbors three days before death. On that day she complained of feeling ill, and located the trouble in her stomach. She said that the affection from which she was suffering had been the cause of the death of her mother and sister, and seemed much depressed at her condition. On Sunday the girl was in agony, confined to her bed, and on Monday she died in paroxysms.

A significant circumstance exists in the alleged statement of Wold, made to his neighbors on the day before the girl's death. He informed them, in a rambling way, that Augusta had been poisoned, and that she would die within three days.

The substance of antimony is used largely in furniture polish and in other preparations for domestic use. It does not enter into the preparation of medicines, and is not a constituent of any food article. The result of the analysis has been telegraphed to Dr. Bratrud, at Warren, and it is likely that the Marshall county authorities will at once take action in the matter.

Later—It is understood that the Marshall county authorities will not have Wold arrested.

RED LAKE FISH.

An Effort Made to Allow the Settlers to Catch Them.

An effort will be made during the present session to amend the fish and gam laws of the state by making provision whereby the fishing with pound nets in lakes containing 420 square miles and over, and where the lands adjacent thereto have been opened up for settlement, will be legalized.

This applies only to the Red Lake and the reservation, and the purpose on the face of the proposed bill is to permit each settler on the reservation, the privilege of taking out a license and securing a permit to fish with a pound net, one being allowed each settler.

The claim is make that the waters of the Red lake extend for two-thirds of the distance of the reservation recently opened up there, that the people are very poor and that if they are permitted to use such nets and not beyound the depth of fifteen feet, they will be able through the sale or trading of the fish obtained to assist themselves to a livelihood.

The bill has already been prepared, and it is the intention of the promoters to have Representative Rapp introduce it. It is doubtful, however, if the measure will secure the approbation of the members of the fish and game commission, as it is believed that while the provisions of the bill presumably are intended to better the condition of the settlers on the reservation, yet it also appears that if enacted it would lead to the financial gain of all those running boats on the lake and river.

With a large number of people fishing on the lake in question, of course, it will be seen that means will have to be provided for the transportation of their fish, and a member of the game and fish commission states that he did not believe the measure will ever become a law.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Case a Hustler.

W. A. Case, the popular Modern Woodmen deputy, is showing his friends an elegant gold badge, set with seven diamonds, that was sent him by the Supreme Grand Camp of the order for his record breaking work in securing additions to the members and for establishing the largest number of camps in the district. This is the third badge of the sort that Mr. Case has received for such work.

For sale—two fine lots; easy terms. Bagley & Mabey.

KILLED.

Brakeman Louis Hale Met His Death Here Monday.

Louis Hale, a brakeman on this branch of the Great Northern, was instantly killed in this city Monday at about 12:30 o'clock, while in the discharge of his duties, and J. K. Barden, another brakeman, suffered a severely sprained ankle and also a broken bone in the foot. The accident happened on the spur going to the Thief River Falls Lumber company's plant, the car on which the two were riding jumping the track and going over the embankment. Hale was caught under the car and his body was mangled almost beyond recognition.

The remains of the deceased were prepared for burial here and shipped to Crookston Tuesday, where the funeral services were held.

The dead man has been in the employ of the road several years, and has been on the Thief River Falls run nearly two years, and was well known to most of the people living on this branch. He leaves a wife and three small children.

Another Cattle Ranch.

A party of six capitalists from St. Paul, headed by Barney Keegan, arrived in the city last evening, and proceeded to Thief River Falls this morning, where they intend to purchase a large tract of land for ranching purposes. The party are possessors of many heads of cattle, which they are at present herding west of Minot, and which they expect to transfer down here in order to be closer to St. Paul and other eastern markets.

One of the party stated to a Journal reporter that they want from four to six full sections of land in one block, if it is possible to secure it in such large tracts, and pay a fairly good price for the same.—Crookston Journal.

We have convinced people from the southern part of this state and other states that those lands offer to the poor man the chance of a lifetime to secure a home where the country abounds in game and the lakes and rivers teem with fish of many varieties, amidst flourishing settlements, near schools and churches and close to railway markets, in one of the most healthful localities in the world.

We have already secured the promise of hundreds of homeseekers whom we expect this spring. So, any one having farms or city property for sale is invited to call. We buy and sell property. We are here for that purpose. Call and see us.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

WORK IN THE KITCHEN.

How the Labor of Washing Pots and Pans May Be Lightened.

Take a new whisk broom and cleanse it thoroughly in a hot suds; dry it and hang it on a nail over the sink where it is within easy reach. At mealtime, as you dish the food for the table, set the kettle in which it was cooked immediately in the sink and draw it full of water, so that every part which the food has touched will be in soak. Kettles that are left to stand unwashed without any water in them during the mealtime hour are ten times the trouble to clean afterward. It takes only a moment to turn the faucet, and the kettle will be full probably by the time you have emptied the next one. Treat the frying pans—everything in which you have cooked—in the same way. Hot water is the best. If you have a good-sized boiler, you can easily spare enough from it.

When you are ready to begin washing the utensils, take the whisk broom and run it around the kettle, removing all the bits of food that cling to the edge of it; then around the sides and bottom in the same way. You will find the broom to be far more useful than a cloth or than the arrangement of metal rings which does duty in the same way. The metal rings are an improvement on the cloth, but not so good as the broom. After you have emptied the rinsing water draw fresh hot water from the faucet into the kettle, make a suds with the soap shaker and with the broom wash the kettle all over, rinse off the soap under the faucet and dry.

How to Whiten Clothes.

Into a large saucepan—porcelain is best—put four pounds of bicarbonate of soda and four quarts of hot water. Stir frequently with a wooden stick until the soda is dissolved. Then add one pound of chloride of lime. Stir occasionally until the solids are dissolved. Then let the liquid cool in a kettle. Strain the clear part through cheesecloth into wide mouthed bottles. Put the stoppers in and set away until used. Any part that is not clear can be put into separate bottles and used for cleaning white floors and the tables. It is also good for cleaning the sink, traps, etc.

How to Make Bean Soup.

Pour two quarts of warm water over a pint of beans and soak all night. In the morning drain and turn into a soup kettle with a quarter of a pound of sliced salt pork, a sliced onion and a root of celery. Bring slowly to a boil and simmer for six hours. Rub through a coarse sieve, return the soup to the kettle and season with salt, pepper and a teaspoonful of kitchen bouquet and then thicken with a teaspoonful of brown roux. Put a handful of dice of fine bread on the surface of the soup after it is in the tureen.

How to Make Hair Tonic.

A hair tonic which has proved itself a blessing for falling hair and dandruff is made by taking 48 grains of resorcin with one-fourth ounce of glycerin and sufficient diluted alcohol to fill a two ounce bottle. Better have double of the amount prepared. Apply every night with a medicine dropper. Keep in mind that the tonic must be well rubbed into the scalp. All that is smeared on the hair is so much wasted material.

How to Make Brown Betty.

In a quart pudding dish arrange alternate layers of sliced apples and bread crumbs. Season each layer with bits of butter, a little sugar and a pinch each of ground cinnamon and cloves. When the dish is full, pour over it a half cupful each of molasses and water mixed. Cover the top with crumbs. Place the dish in a pan containing hot water and bake for three-quarters of an hour or until the apples are soft. Serve with cream.

How to Make Fish Savory.

Make a sauce of one teaspoonful each of butter and flour and one cup of hot milk in which a "pea" of soda has been dissolved. Cook until smooth and then add a gill of strained tomato liquor, a half teaspoonful of salt and a dust of cayenne. Stir in last one and a half cups of flaked cold cooked fish, toss and stir until the fish is heated through and serve on crisp buttered toast.

How to Bone a Shad.

Remove head and tail, cut fish down front and back and remove backbone first, then side bones. Season with salt and pepper and put together. The fish will not appear to have been boned. Cut into desired size pieces, dip into beaten egg, then into bread crumbs. Fry golden brown in deep, hot lard. Garnish with parsley and sliced lemons.

How to Cook Lyonnaise Tripe.

One pound of cooked tripe cut in small pieces, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one of chopped onion, one of vinegar, salt and pepper. Put the onion and butter in the frying pan, and when the onion turns yellow put in the tripe and cook five minutes, season with salt, pepper and vinegar and serve on crisp pieces of toast.

How to Broil Fish.

Select any kind of fish that is in season, wipe, sprinkle with salt and pepper, place in a well greased broiler and broil over a clean fire. Remove from the broiler, season with salt and pepper and brush over with soft butter. Serve with potatoes a la maitre d'hotel.

THE CENTURY'S NEW NATION

Facts About the United States of Australia.

The world was not profoundly stirred the other day by the announcement that a new nation had been born in the Pacific. But the historian of the new century may be obliged to write of it as an epoch making event of the greatest importance, says the New York World.

The United States of Australia, modeled on the United States of America, has now rather less than 4,000,000 population, just about what our Union had in 1800. The total value of the new nation's products last year was $550,000,000, or $137 per capita, which is at least 50 per cent above the per capita production of this country and 100 per cent more than the per capita production of the British nation.

Young Australia begins its career therefore as the wealthiest country per capita in the world. Its industries are chiefly pastoral and agricultural, though its mineral and manufacturing products have an annual value of over $250,000,000. Wool is its great crop, and it was sold for $100,000,000 last year.

It is in the vastness of its undeveloped resources that the young republic of the Pacific—for republic it is in all its essential features—offers so close a parallel to the United States of America at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Its total area is about 5,000 square miles greater than the area of all our states and territories, barring Alaska and our newly acquired islands. The single state of West Australia is just four times as large as Texas. The state of South Australia, the next largest of the newly federated six, has an area of over 900,000 square miles. New South Wales, the smallest state but one (Tasmania), has an area equal to the combined areas of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky and Indiana. New South Wales and Victoria, however, though the smallest, are the most populous and wealthiest.

The mineral wealth of Australia is as yet practically untouched, and it is known to be enormous. It is admittedly possible for it to become the home of a nation of 100,000,000 by the year 2000. Its soil is rich in gold, diamonds, coal, iron, copper, tin and lead. Its exports of coal, both hard and soft, are already enormous. England's trade with the new federation is already larger than with any other of her colonies or dependencies, India alone excepted. It amounted last year to $268,000,000, of which $118,000,000 were British exports. India's total trade with Britain for 1900 was but $27,000,000 larger.

The future of federated Australia is above all interesting to mankind because of its many audacious experiments in state socialism and in government by pure democracy. Its very name, chosen by the people, is significant—"The Commonwealth of Australia." It has a senate and a house of representatives, but the six senators from each state are elected by direct popular vote. The federal parliament is to control all armed forces, make all marriage and divorce laws, as well as all inheritance, labor and arbitration laws. All the railroad lines are already owned by the state governments, and the federation is going to take over the telegraph lines also. With such a vast and rich territory to grow in, under such untrammeled democratic conditions—for the power of the British governor over legislation is absolutely nil—who shall set limits to the growth of Australia in the century just begun?

How to Cure Perspiring Feet.

Bathe the feet every night with warm carbolic solution—ten drops to the quart—and then rub in this powder: Talc, tannoform, compound stearate of zinc, each ten grams; salicylic acid, two grams. Wear thin stockings and vici kid shoes.

How to Cure Crusted Eyelids.

Rub in the following ointment at night, making sure that the ointment does not enter the eyes: Yellow oxide of mercury, 3 decigrams; white vaseline, up to 30 grams.

FATIGUE OF THE EYES.

How to Tell When They Are Suffering From Overwork.

It is no more dangerous to tire the eyes than to tire any other organ of the body. It does not hurt the hand to tire it, and after a brief rest it is as good as ever. It is the same way with the eye.

Every precaution should be taken to preserve and aid the sight. The light should come from over the left shoulder. Artificial light should be steady. Pains or blurring or any symptoms of blindness should receive proper treatment, and when necessary glasses should be used. These are common sense measures for the preservation of the sight.

But when this is done the worker need not feel alarm over having to use the eyes daily, perhaps for a long period and until they are very tired. When the eye for a long time rests upon near objects, the muscles which adjust the eye to vision necessarily get tired, but if the eyes are rested at proper intervals no harm will be done. The eye can bear maximum fatigue as well as other parts of the body.

A sure way of telling when eyes are overworked is by the fact that their natural power and freshness fail to return after a proper amount of rest. When this is the case—that is, when they have had time to feel fresh again and there is still the strained, weary feeling—they are being overworked.

How to Make Potato Crust Beef Pie.

Slice very thin enough cold roast beef to half fill your baking dish. Place the beef, any left over gravy, a large tablespoonful of butter, a small onion, sliced, and salt and pepper together in a stewing pan, cover with water and dredge with flour to thicken the gravy. Cover and simmer gently until the gravy is reduced and rather thick. Have mashed potatoes prepared in usual way. Put the meat and gravy in the baking dish and cover with a thick crust of the potatoes. Brush with beaten egg and bake in a quick oven long enough to brown the crust. A few spoonfuls of left over tomatoes or a spoonful of worcestershire sauce may be added to the stew for variety.

How to Clean Liver.

Cut one pound of calf's liver in inch square pieces and cover with cold water; add one teaspoonful of lemon juice and one whole clove and simmer gently for one hour; add one-half teaspoonful of salt after half an hour; pour off water and add one-half pint of rich milk or thin cream; mix a heaping teaspoonful of flour with one tablespoonful of butter and add as soon as the milk or cream boils; add one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, a pinch of white pepper and let boil up once. Serve on small squares of crisp toast.

How to Cook Breast of Veal.

Remove the bones and spread out the meat on a board. Flatten it out with a rolling pin and spread it with a thick layer of sausage meat mixed with some bread crumbs, herbs and sufficient beaten egg to bind it. Then roll up the meat, tie it with white string or narrow tape and bake it in a moderate oven, basting it frequently. Remove the string from the veal, dish it up on a hot dish, garnish it with lemon cut into fancy shapes and surround it with some thick brown sauce.

How to Make Pepper Sauce.

Take two dozen ripe peppers, remove the stems and most of the seeds, put them in a kettle with three sliced onions, two cloves of garlic, one teaspoonful of salt, one pint of vinegar and one tablespoonful of grated horse radish. Boil together until the vegetables can be rubbed through a coarse sieve. Return to the fire, add a pint of vinegar, one tablespoonful of brown sugar, one teaspoonful each of ground cloves, allspice and black pepper. Boil five minutes. Bottle and seal while hot.

How to Bake Salmon Trout.

Mix one pint of dry bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of minced onion browned in butter, one tablespoonful of parsley, one teaspoonful of salt, one-quarter teaspoonful of pepper and one egg. Fill cleaned fish, sew up the opening; cover with slices of salt pork and bake in hot oven, allowing 15 minutes to one pound. Garnish with fried oysters, lemon slice and parsley.

How to Make Mock Plum Pudding.

An excellent substitute for plum pudding is made as follows: One cupful of raisins, two cupfuls of bread crumbs, one pint of milk, butter the size of an egg, one egg, teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half cup of molasses. Place in a baking dish and bake in a slow oven for about an hour or until firm. Serve hot with the usual plum pudding sauce.

How to Cook Salt Cod and Parsnips.

Pick a cup of the fish into rather large flakes and freshen in cold water, then cover with milk and cook for ten minutes. Pare and cut a small parsnip into dice and boil until tender, then run through a sieve and add this to the milk and fish with white pepper to taste and a tablespoonful of butter and a little flour to thicken. Serve on toast.

How to Prevent Chills.

A woman who for several years lived in a malarial region in the south and who suffered in consequence from chills and fever discovered that chills could be averted by swallowing the seeds of a red pepper with a glass of water at their first intimation.

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

One of the most timely articles in the February number of the North American Review is Senator Henry Cabot Lodge's account of the lasting and statesmanlike service rendered to the United States by the great Chief Justice, John Marshall, whose memory was celebrated throughout the country on the centenary of the day on which he took his seat in the supreme court. Senator Lodge points out that two vital questions confronted Marshall when he began his judicial career; first, whether among a people accustomed in a measure to written instruments of government, but imbued with English traditions, wedded to the common law and suspicious of patent political devices, a national constitution covering the complicated interests of many states, could be made to succeed; and, second, how the constitution could be defended against the principles of separation, made dominant over the states and the means of creating a nation. Senator Lodge's article is a masterly description of the manner in which, in solving these problems, John Marshall rose to the rank of a statesman and a nation-maker. Here is the senator's description of the great chief justice, as he appeared just a hundred years ago:

"Let us look at him a moment, as he stands at the threshold of his great career. He is forty-five years old, and in the full maturity of his powers. He is very tall, very spare, rather loose-jointed and careless in his movements. A little ungainly, perhaps, one observer thinks, with the air of the mountains and the out-door life still about him. Evidently muscular and strong; temperate, too, with all the vigor of health and constitution which any work or responsibility might demand. He is not handsome of face, with his angular features, and thick, unruly, black hair growing low on his forehead, over small, but bright, black eyes. None the less, the face is full of intelligence and force; and all observers, however they differ in details, alike agree that the bright eyes are full of fun, and that about the firm-set mouth there plays a smile, which tells of that generous and hearty sense of humor which pierces sham, and, as Story says, is too honest for intrigue."

Order Early.

Get in your order with your congressman or senator. Each senator and representative will this year be allowed 8,000 packages of vegetables and 1,000 packages of flower seed to send out, each package containing five papers, representing as many varieties. Among the vegetables, peas, beans or corn are made the basis of selection, and to these are added cucumbers, beets, onions, lettuce, melons and radishes. But the selection of flowers reads like the description of some delightful, old-fashioned garden—sweet Alyssum, larkspur, mignonette, nasturtium, pansy, petunia, portulacca, stocks, zinnia, sweet pea and many other homely varieties apt to be overlooked in these days of scientific floriculture. Secretary Wilson is a practical man.

Should Pass.

The proposition to reduce the rate of interest on deferred payments on school lands sold by the state to farmers from 5 to 4 per cent is again before the legislature. This bill was passed by the house two years ago and was defeated by the senate, after the Democrats had caucussed on it and decided to vote as a unit against it. It was introduced upon the motion of State Auditor Dunn, who claims that 4 per cent is more than the average interest rate secured on state investments, and that the proposed reduction will be a relief to the actual settlers who have state lands.

CROSS BREEDING.

An Iowa Farmer Tells Some Interesting Experiences.

The question is often asked, "Does cross breeding weaken or strengthen our stock?" Some think that the cross breeding of swine is one cause of swine diseases, such as cholera, thumps, etc., writes John H. Curl of Iowa in The Prairie Farmer. Others think that cross breeding has a tendency to destroy the size of the offspring. I am not as old as some who give their experience on such subjects, neither have I made farming my business from boyhood, but from my personal experience and knowledge I find in many cases that cross breeding strengthens not only in regard to health, but in general endurance. The mule is by far the superior of the horse when it comes to hardiness, strength and stamina. I have never owned a bunch of pure bred hogs of any of the many breeds, and yet I have owned and cared for hogs for 40 years, and I have never had a case of hog cholera and frequently had a herd of 75 or 100 on the place while cholera was raging all around. I do not mean, however, to advance cross breeding as a preventive of swine plague.

I attribute my escape to the fact that I allow nature to take its course in regard to the wishes of my hogs. They like freedom, and I give it; they like to root, and I have usually allowed it, but to the detriment of my pasture. Above all, through the hot weather they like the wallow and shade. This is a point upon which I lay great stress. Give the hog plenty of clear water to drink, plenty of blue grass or clover pasture and a good wallow and do not give any sour swill, and there will be less complaint in regard to cholera.

In regard to crossing to improve the size of the hog, many breeders of pure breeds may differ with me when I make the assertion that many are finding that a pure bred Chester White boar crossed with a Poland-China or some other good breed of sow makes larger hogs than when bred to one of its own breed, but such is the case. Last January I turned a pure bred Chester boar in with three Duroc Jerseys, three grade Polands and one black Essex. They were all about alike in size and bone. The Essex showed the best pigs from the start up to the present time. The next best are those of the Poland. I could not be induced to cross with the Duroc again, as the size is not there. I am not mapping out a line of breeding for any one to follow, but only giving my experience, with no theory. Some of the best cattle for feeding purposes are crosses between the Hereford and the Shorthorn, so say many feeders, but there are exceptions in all cases.

I would like to see pure bred stock of all kinds kept on the farm, because there is money in the business if conducted in an up to date manner. However, we cannot all be breeders of pure bred stock for the purpose of supplying the demand in that line, but we can breed up and improve all kinds of live stock. In swine breeding never cross but once. One of the greatest drawbacks in the cross breeding of swine is being obliged to get new sows and get rid of the old ones. My experience teaches me to keep the old boar and the old sow as long as possible, as the offspring will be stronger, the number greater and the care of the mother superior to that of the gilt. I have referred to the different kinds of stock that have come under my observation for the purpose of showing that pure bred stock of one strain are not always the largest and best for feeding purposes.

Ancient Use of the Sheep.

In those old times when human industries were not even in their infancy—for they had not yet been born except so far as regards the pursuit of agriculture, and even this was of the merest beginning—the sheep was the principal support of the human race, says The Sheep Breeder. It furnished clothing, meat, milk, butter and cheese, for then the cow was not used for the dairy. When young David took those cheeses and loaves and butter to his brothers when they were fighting the Philistines and the giant Goliath was the champion of the enemy, he carried the products of the flock and not of the herd, and the sheep was the chief dairy animal for ages down to quite modern historical times. The lambs were largely used for food and for sacrifices, and the ewes then were milked to supply the domestic demands. And this fact may be turned to good use even in our modern flocks. For when a lamb is lost by any accident, the ewe may just as well be milked, as indeed at times it is necessary to save her from serious harm by overstocking the udder. It is necessary anyhow that she be relieved for some days, gradually drying her, and the milk will be a very desirable addition to the ranger's breakfast of black coffee and hard tack. Indeed it may be given if not taken in this way to some superior ram lamb, which by double feeding may be made a show lamb and at maturity become a very valuable stock animal. It is better to feed one lamb on two ewes than to put two lambs on one ewe.

No Boom In Wool.

For various reasons a great many people anticipated quite a boom in wool before the holidays. As was pointed out some weeks ago, there is no legitimate reason to anticipate such an event. Too much wool is now on the world's market to allow any such advance as was witnessed just before the late reaction. There is good reason to expect, however, healthy business in wool after New Year's, and there seems to be a general expectation that the price will get materially better before it again hits the downward path.—National Stockman.

BRITISH PRAISE OF DE WET.

A London Journal's Panegyric of the Slippery Boer General.

De Wet has slipped through the fingers of our men again. Like some disembodied spirit—to steal a famous description of Lord Rosebery—he appears and disappears with a frequency and rapidity which are as bewildering to us as they are creditable to him, says The King. In its heart of hearts the British army must be proud of him. For months he has been surrounded by cordons drawn so tightly that he could not possibly escape, and for months he has been escaping from the tightest cordons that could be drawn. He is the most intensely interesting personality of the war, a miracle and mystery. Yet the man who holds the British army at bay is a simple farmer. He has read no military textbooks and has been to no military school. He knows what many English farmers would give much to learn—how to make a fortune out of farming—and though he is said to hate the devil and the English with the same hate, he has supplied tons of farm produce to feed the English at Johannesburg.

But his practical experience of warfare has been little, and the part he is playing today suggests that great soldiers are born and not made. He is the greatest guerrilla soldier since the world began. He is the general traffic manager of South Africa. He could end the war tomorrow if he would. But he won't. He is the bravest of the brave and unmatched in the knowledge he has of the country for which he is fighting to the death. He is said to have made a fortune by farming. He could make half a dozen fortunes by opening schools of military tactics in all the capitals of Europe. Half the generals of the world would be among the pupils. When he is captured there are two things we should do with him. The first is to make him a loyal Britisher, and the second to put him side by side with "Bobs" in Pall Mall.

How to Make Veal Loaf.

Three pounds of raw veal, one-fourth pound of salt pork, chopped fine; add one cup of fine cracker crumbs, two eggs, well beaten; one teaspoonful of pepper, two teaspoonfuls of salt, and a little mace. Bake two hours in a deep dish or pan.

THE VIRTUES OF SALT.

How It May Be Used to Alleviate the Ills of Mankind.

As a dentifrice common salt may be relied on. By its judicious use the teeth are kept white, the gums hard and the breath sweet. When the gums are spongy, the mouth should be washed out twice a day with salt and water.

Warm salt and water held in the mouth will sometimes banish toothache and at least make the affliction lighter, while it is both safe and easy to try.

Again equal parts of alum and salt or even salt alone placed on a piece of cotton wool and inserted in the hollow of an aching tooth will often give relief when other means have failed.

To allay neuralgic pains in the head and face take a small bag of flannel, fill with salt, heat thoroughly and apply to the affected part.

A bag of salt placed hot to the feet or any portion of the body is better for giving and keeping warmth than is the conventional brick or hot water bottle.

Salt placed on the gum when a tooth has been extracted will prevent profuse bleeding at such a time.

An excellent gargle for the throat is simply salt and water. Many serious cases of throat affection might be cured by the use of this alone if only taken in time, gargling every hour or half hour, as the need warrants.

A flannel cloth wrung out of salt water is also an excellent remedy for simple sore throat.

Salt in tepid water is a handy emetic. As an antidote for the poison silver nitrate or lunar caustic give salt and water freely.

For poisoning by alcohol an emetic of warm salt and water should be given and repeated often.

Rare Fossil For Princeton.

The geological department of Princeton university has received from Germany a specimen of an extinct species of flying reptiles called pterodactyls, says the New York Sun. The specimen is preserved in a slab of slate and is the second that has been sent to this country. The head, most of the wings, breastbone, neck, several ribs and parts of the feet are well preserved. The fossil is somewhat larger than a pigeon.

TIME AND SPACE are practically annihilated by the ocean cables and land telegraph systems which now belt the circumference of Old Earth in so many different directions. "Foreign parts" are no longer foreign in the old meaning of the term. Europe, Africa, Asia, are "next door" to us. What happens there to-day we know to-morrow—if we read THE CHICAGO RECORD, whose Special Cable Correspondents are located in every important city in the world outside of the United States. No other American newspaper ever attempted so extensive a service; and it is supplemented by the regular foreign news service of The Associated Press. For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

FASTEST BOAT EVER BUILT.

Launched at Nyack (N. Y.) Ship Yard —Is Expected to Make Over Forty Miles an Hour.

Charles R. Flint's Arrow, under contract to be the fastest ship ever designed, was launched the other day at the ship yard in Nyack, N. Y. It has been built under a guarantee by its designer of 42 miles an hour, and it is expected that under pressure it will be able to make 50. It has been generally given out that the boat was constructed as a yacht for Mr. Flint's personal use, but rumors have been persistent that it was built under contract with one of the South American governments for service as a torpedo boat.

The plans, so far as they have been made public, show the vessel fully equipped for torpedo service.

The Arrow will go in tow to Newark, N. J., where shafting and engines will be put in. The yacht's destination after it has been fitted out at Newark has not been pronounced.

She Has Nine Lives.

The announcement of the illness of the empress of China need occasion her friends no alarm, says the Pittsburgh Times, since a woman who has been so often assassinated, poisoned and burned will easily be able to pull through an ordinary illness.

Chinese Bicyclists.

Chinese bicycle riders are frequently seen in the streets of Hong-Kong and Shanghai carrying an open umbrella and a fan, and in some instances with the handle bars removed.

PLAYING ON SYMPATHY.

The Mean Trick of a Mercenary Youth Who Was Looking for the Coin.

He wore a heavy blue reefer and carried a coarse burlap bag that was much the worse from wear. After depositing the bag under the feet of those on the platform he calmly sucked the yellow end of an unlighted cigarette butt. Something in the bag moved and the conductor was curious, says the Chicago Daily News.

"Rabbits?"

"Naw! A cat."

"Going to take it off somewhere and lose it?"

"Yes, the river is a good dump as any. Down will go the bag and the old tomcat will make a hole in the soft mud."

The blond and brunette sitting near the door had heard it all. Big tear drops came rolling down their cheeks.

"W-what y-you going to d-drown the poor c-cat for?" stammered the blond, and then she just broke down and sobbed loud enough for all to hear.

"Well, it's this way, miss," said the youth in the reefer: "Mrs. Finnegin comes down to our flat and says: 'Jimmy, do you want to make a quarter?' 'Sure!' says I. 'Do you want another ton of coal basketed up to your flat?' 'Naw, Jimmy,' says she, 'I want you to drown a cat.' 'What?' says I, dropping me codfish and looking surprised. 'Yes,' says she. 'I want you to take our old Tommy down to the river. He's got in the habit of jumping on the table and drinking the baby's milk and the old man won't stand it.' Well, miss, I never took no sport in drowning cats, but quarters are scarce, and that's how it happens."

The brunette said something in the blond's ear. There was a hasty unclasping of pocketbooks and two green notes reached the youth in the reefer.

"Now give us the poor cat," said the blond. "We will give him a good home."

"Sure!"

The youth in the reefer shifted the bag in and then hopped off at the next corner.

"Oh!" cried the brunette, as she opened the bag and peeped in cautiously.

"What kind of a cat is it?" asked the blond.

In response the brunette shook the bag and the contents hopped across the car. It was a crippled chicken.

"Oh, that young villain has deceived us. That is the cat we paid to save. Come, get off!"

"One moment!" said the conductor; "you will have to take the chicken and bag with you."

The last the laughing passengers saw of the embarrassed girls they were heading for a vacant lot.

Comforts of Life in Kalamazoo.

"Yes," said the man who was sitting out in front of a log house, "there is some malaria around here."

"Do you suffer much from it?"

"I don't suffer as much as I useter. When I'm havin' a chill I think about how good an' warm I'll be when the fever comes, an' when I have the fever I think about how cool the chill will be, an' that way I manage to git right smart o' comfort."—Kalamazoo Gazette.

The Exceptions.

"I suppose," said the visitor to the penitentiary, "that prisoners are always anxious to have their terms expire?"

"Some of them ain't," replied the guard.

"Remarkable! Which are they?"

"The ones that have life sentences."

Nygaard Was Shot.

After passing through the trying scenes and taking the long chances that naturally fall to the lot, a peace officer out in Beltrami county, ex-Sheriff Nygaard, formerly of Bemidji, but now a timber cruiser down in Oklahoma, had the misfortune to get a ball through his anatomy, and that in an accidental manner.

Last week, while near Muskogee, Indian Territory, Nygaard decided he would take a drink. He came to a purling brook, and, as he was in the act of stooping, his revolver—everybody carries at least one revolver down there—dropped from his pocket, struck a rock and was discharged, the ball passing into the body and making a slight flesh wound under the left arm. Medical aid was secured and the wound is said to be but a slight one.

NIP SPIRO BISAZZA

WANT HIM TO DISCLOSE THE WHEREABOUTS OF $10,000.

Spiro is the man who used to be in business in Thief River Falls, his store burning up here in the winter of 1898, and who has given the retail buyers of Crookston, and some who have dealt in larger lots, some rare bargains in merchandise during the fall and early winter months. The buyers were not asking how it was that Mr. Bisazza could sell goods so cheaply, but the wholesalers from whom the goods were secured appeared on the scene later, either in person or by their attorneys, and told the public.

The failure came, as the knowing ones said that it would, all along, and the remnant of the stock passed into the hands of trustees. When these gentlemen sought to unravel the tangled skein of Mr. Bisazza's affairs, great difficulties presented themselves. After unraveling as much as they could from his lax system of bookkeeping, the debit and credit ends of Mr. Bisazza's business were some $16,000 apart.

He was summoned to appear before Referee Vaule and tell why this was thus. The first attempt to make him disclose was not productive of results to any large degree. He denied the allegations and made statements that were neither convincing nor satisfactory to the referee or creditors.

An expert accountant went over the books and made the shortage something like $18,000, and Mr. Bisazza was again summoned to appear and show cause why he should not disclose the whereabouts of the missing sum or the goods.

Attorney Hubachek, of Minneapolis, was to represent the trustees, but Mr. Bisazza has had business experience, and is possessed of remarkable cunning, and the inquisition developed nothing worth the effort. He swore that his expenses had been very heavy, but, granting every representation made by him to be true, he was still $10,000 shy on assets, and it has been generally believed that if his confidential clerk, Willie Wilson, otherwise known as "Willie Bizoozoo," could be unearthed, he would be able to throw considerable light on the subject. Willie left the city a few days prior to the appearance of the creditors, however, and one brief note dated from nowhere in particular is all the tidings that have come from him since.

Now, Mr. Bisazza may not have been aware of the fact, but very few of his actions during the past weeks have escaped the attention of the parties interested in the case, and the creditors became aware that he was preparing to imitate the example of Pat Crowe, a former resident of Omaha, Neb. His household goods had been packed and sent to the Northern Pacific depot, consigned to James Johnson, Seattle, Wash., and a large shipment of other goods sent to the same place, the shipping bill bearing the name of O. T. Peterson, both as consignor and consignee.

A few minutes prior to the arrival of the passenger train, a man who had been about town during the day, unaccompanied by a brass band, called at the Bisazza residence and asked to see that gentleman. He was informed that the man he sought had gone to see his attorney. The gentleman was Deputy United States Marshal S. J. Picha, of St. Paul, and he proceeded to the Northern Pacific depot, where he found Bisazza, who had just purchased two tickets reading to Seattle, and was placing them in his inside pocket. The officer informed him that he was under arrest, but Mr. Bisazza denied the marshal's authority.

A telephone message summoned Mr. Bisazza's attorney, Halvor Steenerson, who advised his client to yield, and he was taken before United States Commissioner Mix and by him remanded to jail to await a hearing on a criminal charge of concealing $10,000 of assets belonging to the bankrupt estate.

After his arrest, Mr. Bisazza tore up all the papers upon his person, including the two railroad tickets and certain letters. The authorities gathered the pieces together, and hope from the letters thus disposed of to secure information as to the whereabouts of the much-wanted Wilson.

The examination occupied the entire day, and, at its close, Commissioner Mix bound Mr. Bisazza over to the federal grand jury, fixing the bonds at $5,000.

Referee Vaule has made an order requiring Mr. Bisazza to disclose the whereabouts of the sum of $10,000, in default of such action to stand in contempt of the court, subject to the will of Judge Lochren as to the term of imprisonment for such contempt.

CONVICTED.

VERDICT AT ALMA MEANS LIFE IMPRISONMENT FOR PAULSON.

The jury in the case of Erick Paulson, the Thief lake homesteader arrested for the murder of Mary Seldon at Pepin, Wis., agreed late Saturday upon a verdict of murder in the first degree.

Paulson retained the same cold composure that he showed throughout the trial, and did not exhibit the least signs of emotion until he bade good-bye to his aged father, with tears running down his cheeks. The sentence is imprisonment for life at Waupun. A motion for a new trial was denied. The verdict is in accordance with public opinion.

In reply to the usual question by the court, the defendant answered: "You are sentencing an innocent man."

For sale—two fine lots; easy terms. Bagley & Mabey.

HICKS PREDICTS.

LIKELY TO HAVE MANY STORMS DURING FEBRUARY.

The next regular storm period extends from the 14th to the 18th. The disturbances beginning about the 16th, 17th and 18th, will not subside until after the 19th and 20th, and some very heavy tropical storms are probable, especially in the south, during these general and prolonged disturbances. The hardest storms may be expected from about Monday, the 18th, to Wednesday, the 20th. As counterparts to tropical storms southward, no one need be surprised and overwhelmed by blizzards in the north and west. Continued unsettled weather, with squalls of rain and snow, will freely prevail into and through the reactionary storm days, 21st to 23rd, after which very wintery temperature for the season may be expected very generally. The opposition of the planet Mars on the disturbances for ten days before and after that date. Sudden blasts of cold following on the heels of warm rains and thunder, with seismic shakes in many parts of the earth, will be most natural through this part of February.

Having acquired title to the chief section dumping ground, I hereby forbid all persons to dump any rubbage or dead animals thereon in the future. Clear barn manure may be dumped as heretofore. All violations of this notice will be prosecuted.

In this respect there is no other magazine that approaches the NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW."

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly aiming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Tirk Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,

County of Red Lake—ss

I, Adam Zeh, Auditor of said County, do hereby certify that the foregoing copy of the list of real estate taxes delinquent on the first Monday in January, A. D. 1901, hereto attached, was this day received from the Clerk of the District Court in and for said County of Red Lake.

Steamed Nut Pudding.

To half a cup of granulated sugar add one gill of melted butter. When well blended, add two beaten eggs and one cup of milk. Mix two teaspoonfuls of baking powder with two cups of flour and add to the other ingredients. Sprinkle a saltspoonful of salt over 1½ cups of any kind of nut meats broken into bits and add them to the mixture. Butter a mold or pudding dish, turn the mixture in and steam three hours. Serve with wine sauce.

Popcorn Candy.

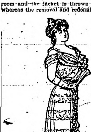
Having popped the corn nicely, salt it and sift it through the fingers, that the extra salt and the unpopped corn may escape. Have ready some candy, made by cooking together one pound of molasses, one-half pound brown sugar, one tablespoonful of vinegar and from 1½ to 2 ounces of fresh butter. When this is all but ready, stir into it as much of the popcorn as it will take up; then turn it out on to buttered or oiled dishes or shape it into balls.

VANITY'S VISIONS.

IN EVENING GOWNS, LUXURIOUS WRAPS AND SMALL ACCESSORIES.

Girl's Ball Gown—Three-quarter Sealskin Coat and Eton Jacket In Broadtail—Crepe de Chine Popular. A Glory of Gold.

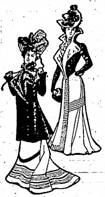
The popularity of the plain short coat in the midst of so much that is ornate and heavily garnished is in part accounted for by the fact that it accommodates the fur collarettes and boas nicely, and these are quickly thrown off when one enters a warm room and the jacket is thrown open, whereas the removal and redonning of a large fur trimmed wrap are affairs of which one thinks twice. However, the truly luxurious woman must have her heavy furs, and a better example of all that is delicious in this line would be far to seek than a three-quarter sealskin coat of today; for instance, one with the new rolled collar, lined with sable, immense soft revers of sable, scalloped bell shaped sleeves and handsome large tortoise shell buttons. Less imposing but equally stylish is an Eton jacket of black broadtail with great revers and collar of white broadtail and broadtail muff to match.



DEBUTANTE'S BALL GOWN.

It is to evening styles that the magic fashion draws us most irresistibly just at this season, for among all vanity's visions are no greater dreams of delight than the confections for the fair young girls whose debut society is now celebrating. One of these appears in the cut—a fascinating first ball gown of net with choux of illusion and pale pink wild roses with dark glossy foliage and garlands of flowers serving as epaulets, while the actual sleeves are in one with the draped bertha. A girdle and ribbon of pale pink satin complete the corsage.

Crepe de chine is the popular evening gown material in soft shades of blue, pink, cream, etc., and very charming is a confection of pale blue crape and silver embroidery.



FASHIONABLE FURS.

Although it smacks of repetition to mention gold, such mention is imperative, for gold continues to be the glory of the toilet.

One seam in front and one in the middle of the back mark the newest skirt model.

Vegetables Rechauffes.

Cold vegetables, such as peas, beans, asparagus, Brussels sprouts, cauliflowers, etc., can all be warmed up and served a la maitre d'hotel by tossing them in butter over a moderate fire, with a sprinkling of chopped parsley, pepper and salt and the squeeze of a lemon. Boiled potatoes are best served cut in slices and fried as pommes de terre sautees.

Scalloped Turkey.

One of the ways to manage the "left over" portions of the noble bird now in season is as follows: In a buttered baking dish, lined with crumbs, put alternate layers of half inch bits of cold turkey, stuffing and gravy (or white sauce and crumbs, if there be no stuffing and gravy), cover with crumbs and bake 15 minutes.

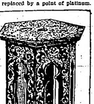
ART OF PYROGRAPHY.

A VERSATILE DECORATION CAPABLE OF MANY APPLICATIONS.

The Necessary Instruments, Including Platinum Points, and How to Use Them—Preliminary Practice. Taboret In Poker Work.

The variety of uses to which pyrography may be applied is endless. It lends itself especially to the broad treatment of large surfaces, but it can also be used in the adornment of the most dainty articles, by delicate lines and soft shadings, says a Good Housekeeping writer in preface to the following practical instructions:

The iron style of earlier days has been replaced by a point of platinum.



DECORATED TABORET.

Platinum is used for poker work, because it is the only metal that will absorb the gas of the naphtha by which the supply of heat is sustained. The complete outfit consists of platinum points, a cork covered handle, a length of rubber tubing, a naphtha bottle provided with connections for tubing, a spirit lamp and a rubber bulb with tubing attached. It is also necessary to have some alcohol and naphtha. Be sure to have the naphtha bottle tightly corked and never open it in a room where there is a light or the smallest spark of fire, as it is very inflammable. The alcohol also should be handled with care. To do a variety of poker work an outfit of several points is necessary, but it is well for the beginner to have at least two, as illustrated in Figs. c and d. The first of these, c, is the more important, as with it both outlining and shading can be done, but the second is better for backgrounds.

Before attempting a design the beginner should practice on a smooth pine board or a piece of whitewood, which is better, as the finer grain makes practice easier. To light the point put some cotton wool in the naphtha bottle and fill the bottle about one-third full of naphtha. Connect the bottle with the cork handle and [illegible] the bulb by the rubber tubing, hold the point in the flame of the spirit lamp until it is thoroughly heated and blow gently by pressing the bulb until the point becomes redhot. The point may now be withdrawn from the flame, and its heat can be kept up and regulated by the pressure on the bulb, which forces the vapor of the naphtha through the tubing into the point, where it burns. The lamp may now be extinguished. The object of the cotton wool in the bottle is to give more evaporating surface. Fig. a shows the apparatus. Sometimes a foot bellows (Fig. b) is used instead of the hand bellows. This is less tiresome and gives the operator both hands for work.

Now grasp the cork handle, not too near the hot point, and try to make true, even lines on the pine board. This at first is very difficult, for an instant's delay in the touch of the point will make a hole or deep dot in the wood, and the line will resemble a smudge. To overcome this first trouble bring the point upon the board with a sweep of the hand and lift it off in the same way. Keep this sweep as even and light as possible until you have a firm, clean line. The beginner will succeed more easily if the point is not too hot.

INSTRUMENTS USED IN THE ART.

Make parallel lines, long and short, broad and narrow, even and graded, straight and curved, as shown in Fig. e.

Designs are to be used in the following manner: Draw them on the wood and burn in firmly and lightly. A quick mode is to trace and design on a piece of tracing paper and then transfer it to the wood by means of impression paper, then burn as described.

Opera cloaks are now almost smothered in chiffon, lisse or mousseline de soie. Ermine and sable mink are the most fashionable furs, and mink is quite charming on strawberry and pastel blues or heliotrope.

A CAREER ....BY.... ACCIDENT

By HOWARD FIELDING.

By CHARLES W. HOOKE.

Jane Lestrell is a name that one hears with increasing frequency. The lady has achieved something that may almost be called fame, though she is not yet 24.

I happen to know that her success is due to a singular chance, and as the revelation of this fact may please the envious and will not worry Jane in the least it is here set forth.

At the age of 20, when Jane found that she would have to make a living, she turned naturally to literature. So many people do! Jane had written (uncompleted) romances in blank books with black covers and had once sold a poem to a comic weekly for the generous sum of $2. She felt that she had the gift.

It chanced that she enjoyed the acquaintance of an estimable old maid—Miss Prudence Whistler—who earned $20 a week as a reader of manuscripts for a publishing firm, and with this lady she found a haven when dependence upon her dead father's relatives became no longer tolerable.

Miss Whistler occupied quaint apartments in a building that harbored a salesroom for secondhand pianos on the ground floor and a strange collection of artistic people—most of them damaged by wear, like the pianos—in the rooms above.

Her friend was away all the day, and Jane sat alone with the muses. Permit me to say, out of the fullness of my heart, that these mythical ladies are very distressing company. Moreover, Prudence Whistler's little parlor was furnished in a style to wear upon the spirits of youth. The chairs and the sofa had come from the ancestral home. They were stiff and straight and upholstered in haircloth. The center table was a strange thing, long and black. Jane thought it must have served an undertaker as a rest for coffins. The pictures were not bad, being mostly details reproduced from famous paintings—faces and figures expressing woe.

The condition of Jane's nerves after a month in this place was such that if any one who suddenly dropped a feather pillow behind her she would have jumped right up through the ceiling into the studio of Diomed Guerin, the animal painter.

It may be that this state of the nervous system is favorable to literary work; I have heard that theory advocated. On the other hand, there is unquestionably a fatality in first stories similar to the so called "beginner's luck" that lures men into the vice of gambling. Let philosophy wrestle with the explanation while history records the fact that Miss Lestrell sold her first story without any trouble at all and received $25 for it.

"Don't lose your head, my dear," said the experienced Miss Whistler. "It may be 97 years before you sell another one."

Jane did not put any faith in this gloomy prophecy, and she went to work upon her second romance with high hope and fierce determination. But she was nervous, as I have already remarked, and her condition was aggravated by the performances of a gentleman named Franz Reinhardt, whose studio of music was directly beneath Miss Whistler's abode.

The tenants in this building knew little of one another, yet there was a rather definite rumor that Reinhardt was an excellent musician in exceptionally hard luck. It was said that he accepted pupils at the absurd rate of 50 cents an hour, and that most of them never paid him.

Jane, who was very fond of music, believed, during the first days of her residence there, that she should enjoy hearing Reinhardt and his pupils sing. There was a register in the wall—a relic of the days when the building had been a private residence heated by a furnace—and it admitted sounds from the studio of music with remarkable distinctness. They did not annoy Jane in the least until she began to be bothered with that second story, and then she suddenly awoke to the fact that Reinhardt sang only one song—"Palm Branches"—and drilled all his pupils—men, women and children—in one single vocal exercise.

Every morning at 9 precisely he would put himself into condition for the day's labors by singing "Palm Branches" four times, using the Italian words, which he pronounced with a strong German accent. "Palm Branches" is a beautiful hymn of praise, but enough of it is enough. It became so familiar in Miss Whistler's apartment that the lady's canary bird used to sing it. The top of the long black table echoed it like a sounding board, and the legs of the haircloth chairs danced solemnly in perfect time.

It rang in Jane's head until she simply had to sing it. There was no other way to get it out of her mind. In the earlier days she would hum it gently. [illegible] when the habit had grown upon her, she found no relief except by singing it right out at the top of her voice. At first she was afraid that Mr. Reinhardt would hear her and take offense, but afterward she was afraid that he wouldn't.

She found herself imitating his vocal methods. It was mimicry, and it was very rude, but she absolutely could not help it. When the professor was drilling that song into one of his pupils and Jane was struggling with her story, she would find nothing in her mind at last but "Palm Branches," and only by singing it once, good and strong, could she get into condition to resume her work.

It was nearly as bad with the vocal exercise. In fact, after a time it was in one respect worse, for she began to associate it with a particular individual of whom she knew nothing except that he had a voice like 50 mad bulls. He was a diligent person, with plenty of leisure, for he came almost every afternoon and usually remained about two hours. He devoted himself entirely to the vocal exercise, and he always made precisely the same mistake in it.

That is very harrowing to the nerves of the listener. One must have an iron constitution to stand it.

"If he makes that mistake again today," Jane would say to herself, "I shall certainly go down stairs and beat his brains out. No, no; he can't have any! He's done it again for the forty millionth time! Oh, you idiot!"

Then she would sing the exercise herself, sometimes with her head out of the window, for politeness' sake, sometimes defiantly, desperately. And one day, when the story was particularly annoying and the roaring basso more stupid than usual, she went in a frenzy directly to the register and yelled that vocal exercise into it until the antique, dilapidated furnace far down in the cellar rang like the cymbals in a band.

This really frightened her, not only because it was so very rude, but because it was the final convincing proof that she was going mad. For a month she had suspected it. There could no longer be any doubt. She walked to the black table and tore up all that she had written on her story that day; then she lay down on the fur rug in front of the grate fire and began to cry in a very childish and enjoyable fashion.

She was interrupted by a knock at the door. Such an event was practically unprecedented. In her surprise Jane forgot all about the worries of a literary life and the inconveniences of going crazy. She jumped up from the rug and ran to the looking glass, where she performed those feats of prestidigitation common to her sex under such circumstances. Then she opened the door and beheld a slender and graceful young man, bright eyed and magnetic. He was dressed with elegance and good taste, and his manner appealed at once to Jane, who had an especial liking for earnest, hearty, energetic people.

"I beg your pardon," said he. "May I venture to present my card and ask for just one minute of your time?"

"Won't you come in, Mr. Norton?" said the girl, glancing at the card. "I am Jane Lestrell."

He saluted the mention of her name very gracefully as he stepped into the room.

"This is an attempt," said he, "to make a right of two wrongs. The books say that that can't be done, but I'm not dismayed. I am the fellow who sings so atrociously in Mr. Reinhardt's studio down stairs. Sings? Let me say bellows and be truthful about it. I can't sing any more than a cow, and I know it."

SHE FOUND HERSELF IMITATING HIS VOCAL METHODS.

"I think you have a great voice," said Jane. "I can hardly believe"—

"That I'm not as big as an elephant? I don't wonder you're surprised. But really, I don't pretend to sing; I come here to help out my friend, Mr. Reinhardt. He's a splendid fellow, and he is very poor. I'm sure he's an excellent teacher of singing, but he doesn't have a bit of luck. None of his pupils can sing. I'm the only one that can even make much of a noise. Now, it's really necessary for a teacher to have some pupils that can become known and attract others. Of course I can never do that, but I can pay for my lessons, which is more than most of them can do. You'll pardon me for mentioning it, but I'm quite well off, and Reinhardt won't take a cent from me except in this way. He's such a good fellow! If you knew him, you'd forgive me for annoying you the way I have with my awful howling. And—and that's what I came up here to say."

"Mr. Norton," said Jane, with her face as red as fire, "did you hear me just now?"

"Why, yes," said he. "We heard you singing the exercise. We've heard you before, and you sing it beautifully. Mr. Reinhardt says that you have a voice like all the nightingales in paradise—that's the way he puts it, and the tears come into his eyes every time he mentions you. He says that you could make your everlasting fortune in concert or opera and win a fame that would reach around the world three times and tie in a double bowknot. That was the way he expressed it, very respectfully, but with his peculiar enthusiasm. I wish you could take a course with him."

"I am taking a course with him," responded Jane. "I sing 'Palm Branches' 25 times a day, and I go through that exercise in my sleep—I really do. I wake myself up with it. And now I'm going to say something perfectly absurd, but it's true. My voice has improved! I really have learned Mr. Reinhardt's method without in the least meaning to do so, and I know that I sing a good deal better for it."

"If I should tell him that," said Norton, "he would die of joy."

"Then please don't tell him," she rejoined. "It's hardly honest to get instruction in that way, and I'm quite ashamed of it. But I'm much more ashamed of having been so childish as to let you and him know that the music annoyed me. I have been so very, very nervous"—

And she told him all about her entry into literature and its painful results.

"You almost tempt me," said she in conclusion, "to give up story writing and try to do something with my voice. I have been told once or twice that I sing quite well."

"FRANZ," SAID HE, "SHE'S COMING DOWN."

"Well!" echoed Norton. "Why, Reinhardt swears that the cherubim and seraphim aren't fit to hum an accompaniment when you are singing! Won't you please come down and sing for him just once? I tell you in the calmest possible manner that Reinhardt would be willing to be burned alive the next minute if you would sing the half of one song for him—the shortest one ever written."

"I suppose that is the way he expressed it," said Jane, with a smile. "I begin to perceive where this extravagant language originates. I don't believe that Mr. Reinhardt is so enthusiastic."

Norton laid his hand upon his heart solemnly, while his fine, dark eyes shone with earnestness.

"If you will think of the most terrible and binding pledge ever uttered by man or woman since the world began," said he, "I will vow to you by it that Reinhardt"—

"I will take your simple word," said she, laughing, "and I will sing for Mr. Reinhardt within ten minutes. Will you please prepare him for the ordeal?"

Norton made a graceful exit, and the next moment he burst into his friend's studio.

"Franz," said he, "she's coming down. In one minute you will see what nature was trying to do when she made all the other beautiful women that ever walked the earth. They were mere experiments, Franz, and Miss Lestrell is the first perfect and complete success."

"I am glad she will come," said the blond young German gravely. "She has a good voice, as it sounds through the floor."

Probably Reinhardt's absence of enthusiasm, after Norton's superabundance, piqued Jane somewhat. She is an obstinate girl, with a touch of vanity in her composition. Whatever the cause, she determined to make Reinhardt understand that she really had a voice. So she went to his studio three times a week for many months and worked like a little slave, subsisting meanwhile on the proceeds of a story or two and her own grit.

The result is well known in musical circles. Jane is a full fledged prima donna, and Reinhardt is the rage as a teacher. And, incidentally, Mr. Willis Norton has found out what love is—the one thing in this universe that is too big even for his powers of exaggeration. At present his fate is uncertain, but if protestations of devotion can win a woman Norton cannot possibly lose.

A CASE FOR AN EXPERT

By Peter McArthur.

Copyright, 1900, by Peter McArthur.

"Hello!" exclaimed Dr. Bascomb as he entered his office, where Jack Kenly was walking back and forth while waiting for him. "What is the matter? You look worried."

"I am worried," said Kenly as he shook hands. "Have you seen Nellie lately?"

"Not since a week ago Thursday, just before you started on your trip to Cincinnati. Is there anything the matter with her?"

"I can't say for certain, but I am afraid there is. She says herself that she is quite well, but she is so silent and irritable that I am afraid her nerves are out of order."

"Well, I'll drop around and see her some time during the day," said the doctor.

"No; I don't think you had better do that," said the young husband. "She protests that there is nothing the matter, and if you made a professional call it might make her angry and increase her nervousness. But, say, can't you come round and have dinner with us and have a smoke with me afterward? And perhaps you could diagnose her case without her suspecting anything, and then you could prescribe something that would help her."

"All right," said the doctor. "Call for me on your way home, and I'll go along."

Having relieved his mind by making this arrangement, Kenly went to his office and during the afternoon telegraphed to his wife that Dr. Bascomb would be with them to dinner. This was not unusual, for he and the bachelor doctor were old college chums and still retained much of the friendship of their student days. As young Mrs. Kenly had made it a point to make herself agreeable to her husband's old friends, so that he would never feel that he had given up too much of his old life when he married, and as she had developed a warm personal friendship for the young doctor, he usually spent at least one evening a week at their house. So there was nothing in the doctor's visit to excite her suspicion.

While Kenly and the doctor were strolling to the house Kenly talked of his wife's ailment, of which he had thoroughly convinced himself. Like many healthy people, he had an almost morbid dread of illness, and his talk had the effect of making Dr. Bascomb very alert for subtle symptoms, for nervous disorders are so elusive.

To their surprise Mrs. Kenly greeted them at the door with her accustomed liveliness, and when dinner was served was the life of the little party, just as she had always been in the past. Indeed her liveliness seemed greater than usual, for her husband was somewhat silent because he was worried and thought that his friend could diagnose the case better if he kept in the background. The doctor, being professionally alert, ascribed her brightness to the elation that so frequently follows dejection and was working up quite a serious case. After dinner Kenly made the excuse that he had no good cigars in the house and went out to buy some so as to leave the doctor and his wife together.

"How are you feeling these days?" inquired the doctor when they were alone, in a tone that he tried hard to make unprofessional.

"Why, I never felt better in my life."

"That's good. You never even have the blues, do you?"

"Of course, I have the blues sometimes. Who doesn't?"

"Um-m! Never see sparks of fire before your eyes when you turn your head suddenly, do you?"

"See here. Are you putting me through a medical examination? Do you want to feel my pulse and see my tongue?"

"Well, that would do no harm," said the doctor, seizing her wrist and taking out his watch. She snatched her hand away almost angrily.

"No, I am not going to let you feel my pulse, and if you are not careful you may feel my tongue instead of seeing it."

The doctor gravely meditated on these symptoms of irritability, and, noticing his silence, Mrs. Kenly looked at him with some alarm.

"Why, you don't think there is anything the matter with me, do you?"

"Oh, no," said the doctor with professional diplomacy, not wishing to excite his patient; "but you know I always look after the health of my friends even when they are not asking me to."

"But I don't see why you should be paying attention to mine just now when I am simply brutally healthy. Has Jack been talking to you? I remember he said something about my not looking well when he got back." And a momentary frown wrinkled her brow. But the arrival of Jack prevented further talk on the subject of health, and the two men retired to the library to smoke.

"Oh, there is nothing serious," said the young doctor, with a wise look. "Her nerves are certainly strung to high pitch, and I should say that her liver is affected somewhat. She probably worried at being left alone while you were away, and that wore on her."

"But what do you suggest?" asked the husband. "Are you going to prescribe for her?"

"Not medicines. She doesn't realize that there is anything the matter with her, and if I ordered drugs it would only tend to make her worse, for, after all, there is something in the contention of the mental scientists that people are sick when they think they are. It is particularly true of people of a nervous temperament. On the other hand, the fact that she does not realize her condition is dangerous, for she might go on thinking herself quite well until something really serious developed."

"But what can we do?" asked Kenly, now thoroughly alarmed.

"Well, I think a change of scene and lively company, with complete rest, would fix her up all right in a few weeks, and that would be a cure she could take without knowing anything about it except that she was having a good time."

"But I am afraid I can't get away with her just now."

"Of course you can't, but she could go to the seaside somewhere near by, and you could spend your Sundays with her, or she could go to the mountains."

"That's so. I'll suggest it to her tonight, for she seems to be in a better mood than she has been of late."

"Yes," said the doctor, "that is one of the strongest signs of her disordered condition. She seesaws from dejection to elation, and tonight she is up. The necessity of playing the hostess lifted her, and, like all people whose nerves are affected, she drew too heavily on her resources, and for that reason was unnaturally bright."

By the time the conversation had ended Kenly was thoroughly alarmed, and he [illegible] with fear the liveliness of his [illegible] they returned to the parlor [illegible] played and sang for them. Not wishing to let her exhaust herself the doctor left early.

They were silent for a few minutes after his departure, and Kenly noticed that the animation died from his wife's face and that she had returned to the mood that had alarmed him. But that only spurred him on to do what he considered his duty.

"I have been thinking, my dear," he began, "that you should really go away somewhere for a rest. Lots of people are going away for their holidays just now, and though I can't go yet, I could arrange to spend my Sundays with you."

"A rest!" she exclaimed with unsuspected energy. "Who told you I was tired?"

"Oh, I don't exactly mean a rest, but a holiday, a good time."

"I must say you are getting very thoughtful—of late."

He affected not to notice the ironical intonation of her remark and proceeded:

"Then you will go, won't you? Which would you prefer, the seaside or the mountains?"

Instead of replying she walked up to him and, looking into his face with blazing eyes, said slowly, but intensely:

"JOHN KENLY, I WANT YOU TO TELL ME."

"John Kenly, I want you to tell me why you want to get me out of town."

"Want you to go out of town? You wrong me, my dear. I shall be very lonely without you and will be sorry to have you go away, but I really think you should go."

"Why should I go? I haven't asked for a holiday, and I know we can't afford the expense, and I don't need to go."

Suddenly an idea occurred to her.

"Was it you that put Dr. Bascomb up to trying to scare me about my health? I know it was, and he and you have some scheme in mind and want to get rid of me for awhile."

"Oh, my dear; you do not mean that."

"I mean every word of it, and, what is more, I mean to stay right here until you go for your holidays, and then I'll go with you—to watch you."

"Hush, dear, and we will drop the matter for the present."

"Yes, and for the future too," she replied, for she had a temper of her own that was quite sufficient for all requirements.

Kenly was afraid that he would aggravate the trouble if he continued the argument until she became more exhausted than she was, so he let the matter drop, resolving at the same time to ask Dr. Bascomb if it would not be better to gently break to her the news of her condition and get her to allow herself to be properly treated. In the morning her eyes were red with silent weeping, but she did not choose to take her husband into favor again, so he went gloomily to his office.

On his way home he called on Dr. Bascomb and told of the failure of his prescription.

"Ah!" said the doctor. "That is serious, and now we must break the matter to her. You had better go home and avoid the subject, and I will drop in during the evening, and we will talk things over quietly. My being there will save her a fright, for I can assure her that there is nothing really serious the matter yet."

The plan was agreed to and Kenly went home. His wife met him at the door in an alarming state of excitement. She was half laughing and half crying, and all the while she kept her hand pressed to her throat.

"Why, what is the matter?" he asked, with ill concealed anxiety.

By way of reply she slipped her disengaged arm around him and laughed up at him as she said:

"OH, IT'S ALL RIGHT," SAID KENLY.

"I suspect we have been a couple of geese, and I will confess to you if you will to me."

"What do you mean?"

"If you will confess to me why you wanted me to go out of town, I will confess why I have been so disagreeable to you ever since you came back from the west."

In spite of his agreement with the doctor Kenly saw that he would have an excellent chance to break things gently to her, so he agreed.

"Go ahead," he said. "Though I did not think you were cross."

"Oh, yes, I was, and it was all because I thought you had forgotten my birthday." And she withdrew her hand from her throat and showed the brooch he had ordered sent to the house for her during his absence.

"Your mother sent it to me today and said there had evidently been a mistake. You had absentmindedly given your old address, and, as your name is the same as your father's, the jeweler naturally sent it to your mother. Why didn't you tell me that you had sent it?"

"I thought that if you didn't think it worth speaking about I would say nothing either, and then you were so different from what you usually were that I got alarmed."

"Alarmed?"

"Yes; I thought you were ill, and when Dr. Bascomb was here he diagnosed your case as one of overstrained nerves and liver complaint, and that was why I wanted you to go out of town, so as to get a change and a rest. We thought it would only make you worse to alarm you by saying anything about your condition, but when you objected so positively we decided to tell you, and Dr. Bascomb is coming around to see you tonight."

It may sound undignified, but Mrs. Kenly simply shrieked with laughter. At last she gasped:

"So—so I have liver complaint, have I, and nerves? Oh, wait until I see him! Why, I was only cool to you and cross because I thought you had forgotten my birthday. But it seems it wasn't enough that we should make fools of ourselves. He had to come in and do the thing scientifically. Oh!"

When Dr. Bascomb came, he found his prospective patient and her foolish looking husband sitting on a sofa in a way that suggested the honeymoon.

"Oh, it is all right," said Kenly. "I have been a doddering idiot, and you"—But his wife's laughter drowned all further remarks.

"I never knew that family rows were now considered pathologically, doctor. I have a number of friends that are ailing in that way, and I shall take pleasure in recommending you."

The doctor looked from one to the other in helpless amazement. They both seemed to have gone crazy.

"It was just this way," said Kenly. "I was having a row with my wife and didn't know it, and all the symptoms we observed were nothing more or less than ordinary temper."

Then they told him the whole story, and now all Mrs. Kenly's friends think it was just lovely of Dr. Bascomb to send her such a beautiful pair of vases. But they don't know the story she has kept a secret.

FEEDING BY ELECTRICITY.

An Up to Date Invention For Farmers Now on Trial In Michigan.

A man named McNair has devised a system of pasturing sheep by electricity, and experiments are being made with it at the agricultural experiment station of Michigan at Lansing. In recent years nearly every town of any size has been provided with an electric generating plant, and frequently the wires are strung along country roads from town to town. This fact led Mr. McNair to attempt the use of electricity on the farm. For sheep feeding he devised a curious pen some 15 feet square, built of wire and mounted on broad, flat wheels. This pen is designed to run in any pasture, even though it be hilly. Wires connect it with a small motor stationed at one side of the pasture, this in turn being connected with the electric wires from which power is derived. A turn of a button, and the pen slowly creeps across the field. This is the essence of the invention.

Two lambs and part of the time an old ewe have been pastured in the pen during the summer at the station at Lansing. The field is planted with lucern, growing thick and heavy. The pen is so arranged that it crawls the full length of the pasture in one month, traveling about two feet an hour. At the end of this time it is switched around and travels back again. As it moves the sheep eat every bit of the fodder, eagerly cropping next the forward side of the pen as it runs over new ground. A bit of canvas duck is hung over one corner of the pen so that the sheep may be well sheltered, and, curious as it may seem, they have become so accustomed to the moving of the pen that when they lie down to sleep they snuggle up close to the forward end of the pen so that they may lie as long as possible without being disturbed by the rear end of the pen as it creeps toward them.

When the pen has passed, the lucern that has been cropped by the sheep grows up again, and by the time the pen has made its monthly circuit the pasture is again in good condition. The advantages of this electrical pen are that the sheep are kept from running over, half eating and trampling down a large amount of pasture, and it keeps the sheep quiet, so that they take on flesh rapidly.

The Flockmaster's Inning.

The only thing to do for the insatiable American taste for mutton is to "take something for it," a lamb chop or a leg o' mutton, says The Breeder's Gazette. Comment has been recently made on the capital demand at this market for sheep and lambs, inquiry outstripping the supply and absorbing the enormous receipts with scarcely a ripple in the market. From Kansas City comes a complaint that packers are unable to get sufficient supplies of fat sheep to keep their killing plants in operation to full capacity. So keen has been the demand for mutton that packers have been obliged to enter into competition with feeders for the range bred sheep that should by rights go into feed lots rather than to the shambles. Now that the run from the range is largely over, dependence must be placed on the supplies from the feed lots, and it does not seem that the demand at that market is likely to be met. All this comes from the increase in the appetite of our people for mutton. Packers at Kansas City have planned to increase their output of mutton if they can obtain the raw material. Observe the situation: Last fall so many sheep were going on feed that conservative heads feared for the future of the industry. The enormous numbers that came from the feed lots during the winter and spring were licked up at satisfactory prices, and now killers are competing with feeders for sheep. This certainly argues the expansion and the permanency of the industry. It is merely the taste of improved mutton that has wrought this revolution. The public knows a good thing when it tastes it. The industry is capable of considerable extension yet, and the man who breeds and feeds good sheep is very apt to come out winner.

Mix one teaspoon of mustard, one teaspoon powdered sugar, one-half teaspoon salt and one-fourth teaspoon cayenne in a small bowl or saucepan set into a large pan of ice water. Add the yolks of two raw eggs and stir well with a small wooden spoon. If the yolk thickens at once and can be held on the spoon, you may be quite sure that the oil will unite with it readily, but if the yolk seems thin and watery and spreads all over the pan it will take very slow and careful manipulation to make a perfect emulsion.

Have ready and measured one pint of olive oil, two tablespoons vinegar and two tablespoons lemon juice.

Pour a teaspoonful of oil into the bowl and tip it so the oil will stay at the lower edge. Gradually take it into the egg as you stir and when it disappears add another spoonful. And so go on adding oil, more and more each time, until when it is thick like batter you may add it by the tablespoonful and at last by the quarter cupful. Be careful to stir in each portion until the mass is smooth and glossy rather than rough and broken. If it seems inclined to crumble and rapid stirring does not remedy it, add a little of the acid and when smooth go on with the oil. Be careful not to use too much acid, as it makes it thin. It should be thick enough to drop when ready to use. If you wish a larger quantity and do not care for so large an amount of oil, add half a cup of whipped cream or the beaten whites just before serving.

Never mix the mayonnaise dressing with the meat or fish until ready to serve, and then only part of it, and spread the remainder over the top.

Mayonnaise tartare is simply the addition of chopped on[ion]s, pickles, parsley and capers to the mayonnaise.

How to Make Clam Chowder.

One dozen medium sized clams, one-quarter pound of fat salt pork, three good sized onions, eight potatoes, one-half can of tomatoes, one-half teaspoonful of lemon extract. Cut pork in dice, slice onions thin, put in stewpan and fry until brown. Add three pints of hot water and juice from clams. Cut potatoes in dice and put into boiling mixture. When nearly done, add the tomatoes. Cook until potatoes are thoroughly done, then add clams chopped fine and lemon extract, one level teaspoonful of salt and a good dash of black pepper. Let stand and simmer, not boil, for two hours before serving.

How to Boil Poultry.

Fowls to be boiled beautifully white should soak an hour or two in skimmed milk. When trussed and singed, flour them well, put them in cold water with a slice of bacon (sweet and new) and a small onion. Put a small piece of bacon and an onion with a little parsley inside. Set them over a slow fire, cover the pot close and let them simmer. Remove the scum carefully as it rises, cover them again and boil gently 20 minutes. Take them off the fire and put to side of range and let simmer until done.

How to Broil Salt Mackerel.

Select a fine mackerel and freshen and broil in the usual manner, then lay on a hot platter. In the meantime brown three ounces of butter in a frying pan. Then throw in 40 leaves of water cress which has been carefully washed and dried. Let it fry crisp, then add three tablespoonfuls of vinegar and six shakes of pepper. When hot pour the whole over the fish and place in the oven five minutes. Serve at once.

How to Make Bacon Fooze.

Beat four eggs very light. Add a half cup of milk, a tablespoonful of flour and a saltspoonful of pepper. Lay eight or nine thin slices of bacon in a hot frying pan. When slightly brown turn and pour over them the prepared batter. Brown on both sides and serve on a hot platter.

How to Make Nerve Tonic.

An excellent tonic for the nerves is composed as follows: Compound elixir of celery and compound sirup of hypophosphites, each 180 grams. Take two teaspoonfuls in a little water after meals.

VALUE OF PEDIGREE.

Facts In Breeding That Have Been Reduced to General Laws.

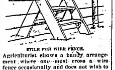
Pure bred animals are those that have been bred by careful selection of the best with a view to a certain trait, conformation or excellence of some kind until that point has not only been accomplished, but so indelibly impressed that it will be uniformly transmitted to the offspring of such animals. There are improved and degenerated pure breds, says a correspondent of The Prairie Farmer. The native scrub breeds are degenerated pure breds. They are reduced by the laws of change and self preservation to that common level of degeneration that has made them not only uniform in their kind, but capable of reproducing that degenerate uniformity with as much certainty as the improved animal reproduces its improved characteristics. The law of nature utilized by breeders of improved domestic animals is that "like produces like;" but, like all laws, it has its exceptions, and when an animal does not reproduce its likeness we find its analogy in some of its ancestors, usually between the first and fourth generations; hence we never trace a pedigree beyond the seventh generation. In grading up in Shorthorn breeding in England four crosses are considered sufficient to constitute a pure bred animal.

In Jersey cattle an animal must trace through an unbroken line of imported or island bred ancestors, in which there is no miscellaneous blood, in order to be entitled to a register. The law in breeding being that "like produces like," the breeding animal itself—its symmetry, constitution and high order of individual excellence—is of first importance, since in the main the offspring resembles its immediate ancestor. The pedigree is of secondary importance, because by the law the offspring may, under the exceptions, find its analogy or antetype in a more remote ancestor. The ancestors constitute the pedigree, and their importance as a factor in the breeding value of an animal grows out of this exceptional and occasional recurrence in finding a resemblance. The resemblance may be to any animal in a pedigree to the sixth or seventh generation, but is most likely to be to the nearest in kin.

In the past breeders have said much of the blood of their animals—"good blood," "thorough blood," etc. While certain breeding animals have in all breeds established a reputation for the excellence of their offspring for certain desirable traits, making the blood of that animal a desirable element in a pedigree, we have advanced in the science of breeding until we not only want the strain of blood, but want it through its most excellent channels—through "winners." A valuable pedigree is one in which there is no faulty ancestor within the range of the seventh generation. An extraordinary pedigree is one in which there is not only no faulty ancestor, but one in which all of the ancestors to which the animal may revert in breeding are extraordinary of their kind, so much so that the reproduction of any one of them would be satisfactory as a breeding result. A pedigree in which there are some extra good animals and some decidedly faulty ones is a faulty pedigree because of the risk of atavism or back breeding and the possibility of copying the faulty animal. Grades are therefore uncertain in their breeding, as they may copy after the improved side of their pedigree or may copy after the scrub side. They may breed irregularly, some good ones, some bad ones. A first class animal, with a first class pedigree, is the only one to use for the best results. Then why does it not pay to be very careful in selecting the foundation stock for a herd of any kind? A herd founded on such pedigrees means success.

Getting Over Wire Fences.

A wire fence is an ugly affair to cross either by climbing over or crawling under or between the strands. The accompanying cut from The American Agriculturist shows a handy arrangement where one must cross a wire fence occasionally and does not wish to lose the tension on the wires by cutting a gateway. This double stepladder can be put together in a few moments and will prove a very convenient affair.



STILE FOR WIRE FENCE.

Stack Hay.

Feed stack hay before that stored in the barn to avoid loss. While the hay will dry out nearly as much in one place as in another, there is a far greater loss in feeding value in that put up in stacks due to spoiling on top by the weather and on the bottom by dampness from the ground. The Colorado experiment station found the loss to be 12.4 per cent in feeding value in stacked hay and but 2.5 per cent in that stored in barns, a difference of 10 per cent. Thus nine tons of hay put in the barn will feed as much stock as 10 tons put in stack. When this test was made, the conditions were more favorable than the average season for feeding stack hay.—American Agriculturist.

DOING WELL.

The session of the legislature has, thus far, been remarkable for the absence of radical, erratic and freak bills. The senate, being a hold-over body, and having the benefit of a session's experience, is naturally conservative, but the house is, as usual, composed largely of new men, and new men are often prone to place too much confidence in the operative power of the words, "Be it enacted." Legislation is a good deal like medicine in one respect—is of no remedial value unless it is taken only in the form of enforcement. A law that is not enforced or enforceable becomes at once a dead letter, and encourages lawlessness by its very non-enforcement. Be it said to the everlasting credit of past Republican legislatures, there have been very few laws made that could not be enforced, or that had to be repealed.—Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

VALUE OF FARM CROPS LAST YEAR.

The January bulletin of the department of agriculture gives the value of the principal farm crops of the United States grown last year. The figures are as follows:

Corn	$751,220,034
Wheat	323,515,177
Oats	208,669,233
Barley	24,075,271
Rye	12,295,417
Buckwheat	5,341,413
Potatoes	90,811,167
Hay	445,538,890

It appears that, next to the corn crop, hay is the most valuable of the northern-grown farm products.—Chicago Record.

LAW IN KANSAS.

Where a man wilfully drove and kept a herd of horses on another's lands, the Kansas supreme court ruled that no crime had been committed, and told the victim to bring a civil action for damages. Where a new tenant broke into a building partially vacated, but held under an unexpired lease, the same court ruled that the old tenant no such ownership as would enable him to recover for injury to the realty, and that no trespass had been committed of which he could complain. These laws and decisions perhaps explain why little attempt has been made to punish Mrs. Nation for destroying saloon property.—Grand Forks Herald.

HIS TROUBLES.

There is some little philosophy in the following remarks, which a Tutonic friend of mine was overheard recently addressing to his dog:

"My dog, you haf a schnap. You vas a dog und I vas a man, but I vish I vas you. Effryvay you haf de best of it. Ven you vant to go mid der bed in, you shust turns round t'ree times und lay down. Ven I go mid der bed in, I haf to look up de place und undress mineself, und mine vife vakes up und scolds me, and den de baby cries, und I haf to vawk up and down; den bymby, ven I shust gets to sleep, it's time to get oup again. Ven you get oup, you stretch und scratch a couple times und you are oup. I haf to dress mineself und lite de fire, put on de kettle, scrap some mit mine vife already, und den maybe I get some breakfast und maybe not. You play around all day und haf no troubles. Ven you die, you shust lay still. Ven I die, I haf to go to hell yet."—Tony Thinkabit, in Crookston Times.

DIFFERENT NOW.

All during the campaign of 1900 the Democrats howled about Neely, the Cuban postoffice defaulter, and declared that the Republican administration dare not prosecute him. The administration did prosecute him and convict him, and, as soon as he was convicted, which he practically is, he declares that he is the victim of a conspiracy, and those same Democratic papers are snivelling over the case and saying the administration has made Neely a scapegoat. It was the same way in the case of Captain Carter, whom the Democrats declared the president was afraid to punish for his defalcation. Carter is doing time now, and naturally has the sympathy of the Democrats. From a Democratic point of view, nothing that a Republican administration does is right.—Warren Register.

NOT STRANGE.

A prohibition editor has heard that alcohol can be made of wood, and is horrified at the idea of a man going out with a rip saw to get roaring drunk on a rail fence. There is really nothing so very preposterous about that. Men have been known to get drunk on water. In fact, a man may get drunk on water just as readily as on land.—St. Paul Globe.

HOW TO GET RID OF HABIT.

A schoolmaster once said to his pupils that to the boy who would make the best piece of composition in five minutes on "How to Overcome Habit" he would give a prize. When the five minutes expired, a lad of nine years stood up and said: "Well, sir, habit is hard to overcome. If you take off the first letter, it does not change 'abit.' Then, if you take off still another, you still have a 'bit' left. If you take off still another, the whole of 'it' remains. If you take off another, it is not totally used up, all of which goes to show that, if you want to get rid of a habit, you must throw it off altogether." Result: He won it.—Ex.

WANTED ANOTHER.

The other day Mark Twain wrote Mr. Carnegie about as follows:

"My Dear Mr. Carnegie: Understanding that you have a great deal of money, for which you find no immediate use, and, knowing your philanthropic spirit and your desire to help all worthy persons, I write to ask you to make me a contribution of $1 50. I will tell you why I want the money. In my early youth my mother gave me a hymn-book, which I have kept and used through all these years, until it is entirely worn out. I feel that this sort of a request will meet with a generous response from you. Very truly, your old friend, MARK TWAIN.

SPELT ALL RIGHT.

Minnesota and the Dakotas are becoming interested in a new Russian grain, called spelt. The seed was first brought to this country by emigrants from Europe. Farmers who seeded spelt last year state that, although the season was a trying one, good crops were secured, fifty bushels being obtained from one bushel of seed some times. The grain is easily grown and stands drought much better than most grains, ripens early and makes a superior feed for animals. It is said that the Canadian Pacific will introduce spelt along its line, and the officials of the proposed Canadian & Northern are considering it for the country through which their road is to pass, to the north of the Canadian Pacific. — Crookston Times.

WILL COME WEST.

SENATORS WILL VISIT RESERVATIONS THIS SUMMER.

Washington, Feb. 18.—The Indian reservations in Minnesota and other states of the northwest will be visited during a recess of congress by the senate committee on Indian affairs, with a view to giving the committeemen information, as a result of personal investigation, concerning the many intricate questions pending before the interior department and congress relating to the affairs of the red men. The trip will probably consume several weeks' time, and will give opportunity for the committeemen to investigate timber questions and the school systems on the various reservations of Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas. There are differences of opinion among the department officials and members of both houses in regard to all these questions On Indian reservations in Wisconsin the plan of permitting lumbermen to establish mills on the reservation for lumber manufacturing, employing, where possible, Indian labor, has worked successfully. It is claimed by members of the Minnesota delegation who are familiar with the situation that this policy would not work satisfactorily, especially taking into consideration the immense tracts of timber, aggregating more than a billion feet, that would be sooner or later thrown upon the market.

The Minnesota situation is embarrassing the department, on account of the fact that part of the fact that part of the timber land has been ceded to the government and a part of them on which valuable pine tracts continue under the Indian office with the Indians in part occupying allotments and others living in tribal relations. The point is made by Minnesota representatives that if the timber on lands that have been ceded to the government is be sold, permission should be given to the purchasers to manufacture the lumber from logs cut on the ceded lands anywhere they choose.

Aimed at Pot Hunters.

The senate committee on game and game laws this morning recommended Senator Meilicke's bill, prohibiting the shipment of ducks, geese, brant and other aquatic fowl from the state. The bill is aimed at "pot hunters," who last fall shipped thousands and thousands of ducks and geese to the Chicago market. — Minneapolis Journal, Feb. 18.

FOR REFORESTING.

ABANDONED STATE LANDS WANTED BY FORESTRY ASSOCIATION.

Capt. Judson N. Cross, of Minneapolis, president of the State Forestry association, is preparing a bill that will be introduced shortly, authorizing the state to turn over forfeited and abandoned non-agricultural lands to the state forestry board for practical experiments in reforesting. The bill contemplates a test of the recommendations of Professor Schenck, the forestry expert from Baltimore, N. C., who investigated the opportunities for forestry in Minnesota. It means an effort to grow new pine in the northern part of the state, where fire and lumbermen have laid waste. The bill results from the Pillsbury gift of 1,000 acres for forestry purposes, and will ask a small appropriation with which to begin the work. Professor Schenck estimates that areas may be reforested and made to return legal interest on the original investment in from 80 to 100 years.

The enactment of the pending measure will give the board control of thousands of acres of worthless land unmarketable and of no value to the state.

Winter Feeding of Hogs.

The winter housing of hogs is not an easy matter to deal with, says J. L. Riley in The American Agriculturist. The main difficulty seems to be in getting them to take enough exercise. When one has but few hogs, he can master this part of the difficulty very well, but when the number is large and comprises all ages, sexes and breeds the question becomes complex. My buildings are not well suited to provide exercise, and in the winter I am compelled to confine animals more closely than desirable. I have been able to obtain very satisfactory growth, but have not yet convinced myself that I am producing bacon of the best quality. A piggery must be dry and warm. I have had satisfaction from wooden buildings and prefer wood to anything else for the walls of the building. I have some cement floors with planked sleeping places which are giving fair satisfaction, but my farrowing pens are floored with boards.

For pigs just after weaning I find nothing better than wheat middlings and skimmilk. Sometimes I cannot get enough skimmilk and have to divide the limited supply among those needing it most. I have used ground oil cake and ground flaxseed in small quantities steeped with the middlings; but, though they are better than nothing, they do not equal milk. Of the two the ground flaxseed is perhaps the better, but it should not constitute more than about 5 per cent of the total food. By the time pigs are about 3 months old a little mashed grain is sometimes added. I like barley for this purpose and often add a few oats ground as fine as possible. Soon after this a few roots are added to the mixture. I feed roots raw and find them satisfactory, except that sometimes cooked roots are eaten a little more readily. I prefer sugar beets, but turnips and mangels are also good. When potatoes are fed, they should always be cooked. Raw roots are pulped and mixed with the meal ration, after which the whole mass is moistened.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

The Crookston band—twenty-four strong—will give an entertainment here Saturday evening. Admission, 50 and 25 cents.

Will Vaughan has relinquished his claim up near Germantown and Oscar Olson, of the southern part of the state, has filed upon the same.

L. G. Browning, United States commissioner for the district of Minnesota, is prepared to give attention to homestead filings and take final proof.

Shaw's Pure Malt—the condensed strength and nutriment of barley and rye. Perfectly mellow and pure. Sold by John Morgan, Thief River Falls, Minn.

Berry, the photographer, has taken some fine street views of the city. Send a few of them to your friends and show them what a nice little city we have.

C. C. Knappen, of Crookston, was in the city the first of the week distributing copies of the Gateway Magazine, which contained a write-up of Thief River Falls.

If you want to file on a piece of government land it will not be necessary to go to Crookston. Make your filing in Thief River Falls before L. G. Browning, U. S. commissioner for the district of Minnesota.

The entertainment given by the Crookston band at Red Lake Falls recently was largely attended, and it is to be hoped that Thief River Falls will do as well. The band boys give a nice, clean entertainment, and should be greeted by a large house.

Cass Lake correspondence in the Duluth Herald: Earl Rogers and wife left on Wednesday for Minneapolis, where they will hereafter make their home. Mr. Rogers has accepted the position of superintendent of the C. A. Smith saw mill at the Mill City, and will enter upon his new duties at once. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have made many friends during their residence at Cass Lake, and all will much regret their departure. Mr. Rogers, by the way, is one of the best mill men in the country.

UNANIMOUS

WAS THE SPECIAL ELECTION HELD TUESDAY.

The special election held Tuesday was one of the quietest and most unanimous elections ever held in Thief River Falls. A small vote was cast, but it was decidedly in favor of bonding the city for $7,500, the money to be used to pay for the electric light plant. The vote was as follows:

	Yes.	No.
First ward	99	7
Second ward	65	5
Third ward	36	4
Total	200	16

Saturday Night.

A special train of Masons will arrive in the city Saturday evening from Crookston and install the officers of the local Masonic lodge and confer the third degree upon five candidates. After the meeting a lunch will be served at the Hotel Ogahmah by the wives of the Masons.

A CONCERT.

CROOKSTON BAND WILL BE HERE SATURDAY EVENING.

The celebrated Crookston band will give a concert in the Methodist church in this city Saturday evening, Feb. 23. Among the members of the band—and there are twenty-four of them—are to be found some of the finest musicians in the northwest, and the music-loving people of Thief River Falls will be given a rare treat. The price of admission will be 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children.

The band will come up on the special train, and will arrive here at about 6:30 Saturday evening.

FAVOR IT.

INDIANS NOT OPPOSED TO OPENING UP OF THE RESERVATION.

The Indians held a council up at the Red lake last week, and it was the unanimous opinion that they would cede to the government that part of the reservation in Red Lake and Marshall counties, providing the government would pay them $2.50 per acre. They want the money paid to them in a lump sum and then divide it, giving each his share.

A meeting of the commercial club was held last evening and a resolution was adopted urging the government to accept the offer.

LEGISLATIVE.

A LETTER FROM ST. PAUL ON PERTINENT TOPICS.

Almost without exception the bills introduced at the present session of the legislature are of a curative or remedial nature, indicating that the solons have designs upon the acts of their predecessors, rather than that their successors shall have the undoing of what they do. It was once said by a distinguished Wisconsin lawyer that "the legislature meets every two years to repeal the acts of the last two years and pass other acts for the legislature of the next two years to repeal." With more than one-third of its term passed, the present legislature has shown no disposition to furnish material for the legislative pruning knife of the future.

Thus far there is really only one bill under discussion that is of a partisan character, and that is one to prohibit the use of the same party designation by more than one candidate on one ticket—that is that there may not be a "Democrat," a "People's Democrat" and a "Socialist-Democrat" on the same ticket. This bill is introduced, of course, by a Democrat, in furtherance of the contention that the presence of Lucas on the ticket last fall as a "Socialist-Democrat" mislead ignorant Democrats and defeated John Lind for governor. It has been the invariable custom in the past to give every Democrat a chance, whatever faction of Democracy he may espouse, but this would shut out all branch organization.

It is proposed by Republicans as the only fair solution of this problem, if the Democrats insist upon such a rule, that it go still further, and that the bill provide that no candidate shall have opposite his name the designation of more than one party, or, in other words, that a candidate must stand on the ticket as a Democrat, a Republican, a Populist, a Socialist or the candidate of some one recognized party. To any fair-minded person this must seem a fair and just regulation, if there is to be any regulation. If it is not right for the Socialists and Democrats to fuse, then it cannot possibly be right for the Populists and Democrats to fuse. If it leads to confusion to have a "Socialist-Democrat" on the ticket, it must be equally confusing to have a "People's Democrat." If the Socialists and the Democrats or the Populists and the Democrats happen to nominate the same man, it would certainly be a fairer test of the respective parties to have each party vote for its candidate under the party designation than it would be to have them bunched under a fusion designation.

The fact of the matter is that every move made by the Democrats and Populists in the direction of ballot laws is a confession that ignorance and illiteracy are largely confined to those two parties, and that intelligence and enlightenment are the distinguishing characteristics of Republicans. No special legislation has ever been invoked by Republicans for the benefit of the illiterate vote, for the reason that the illiterate votes are not Republican. The overwhelming majority of intelligent voters are Republicans, and need no special laws to protect them in their rights.

In view of these conditions, it has often been suggested that, as a premium on intelligence and a safeguard against harmful ignorance, a rigid educational qualification be adopted. Of course there is, and always will be, objection to such a qualification as restriction upon free ballot, but, if the Republicans of the north were as partisan as Democrats of the south, such a qualification would be adopted, and the Democratic party would lose fully three to one by the voters that would be disfranchised under it. It would, therefore, seem that the Democrats are treading upon perilous ground when they approach the question of the ballot laws.

Governor Van Sant and Auditor Dunn are both warmly advocating the passage of the board of control bill, which, while it provides for three salaried positions, cuts off ten times that number of officials under the present law, many of whom are also salaried. The bill has been carefully drawn and is being carefully considered in every detail, so as to guard against every possible flaw as to compliance with constitutional requirements, and the attorney general and other legal authorities are being consulted as to every detail of the bill. So far as published expression of opinions can be had among members, it is the opinion that the bill will become a law.

The pensioners of the late Populist-Democratic administration are very loth to let go of the good thing to which they fell heir under the one anti-Republican administration in forty years. Surveyor General Corser, of the Minneapolis district, has refused to surrender his office to his Republican successor, upon the ground that his appointment is in the nature of a contract, and that it can not be determined until the expiration of the term for which he was appointed—two years. This is a ludicrous Democratic answer to the Democratic statement made in the campaigns of 1898 and 1900, that the Democrats did not want the offices for the sake of the offices.

In view of the alleged attitude of Democracy an Populism towards corporations, there is something almost amounting to inconsistency in the fact that Towne, Pettigrew and all the Pop celebrities, who temporarily disappear, find comfortable lodgment in the legal departments of the great corporations. At least four ex-Democratic candidates for high state offices are now in the employment of railroad or other corporations. They are D. W. Lawler, Judge Thomas Wilson, Cy. Wellington and Judge Chas. E. Flandrau.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Specially prepared articles on Current Topics, explanatory and instructive, are often just what the newspaper reader wants. Readers of the Minneapolis Journal are to have this advantage. February 18th and the special mail edition for February 19th there appears in that paper the first of a series of articles under the general title of

The Current Topics Club.

Among the subjects to be treated are

"Colonial Governments of To-day," with reference to the colonial questions that confront our own country;

"The Opportunity and the Man," which will show whether the opportunities are all gone;

"The Art of Living a Hundred Years," not a whimsical notion, but a matter of scientific, as well as popular, interest at this time;

"American Life a Century Ago," interesting and instructive comparisons and contrasts with the present;

"The Woman's Club Movement," and what it is really accomplishing, and

"What the Government Does for the People," a valuable and instructive insight into a matter about which the most of us have rather vague notions.

These articles will appear daily in the Minneapolis Journal for at least four months. Back numbers may be obtained for a reasonable time. The Journal, containing these articles for three months and a fine map of Minnesota and map of the world for

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.
For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.
THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.
Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.
It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.
While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.
Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

AN ABLE SERMON

DELIVERED BY THE REV. W. A. STERLING.

Prov. 22 : 6—"Train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

It has been truthfully said, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," yet how many parents realize the terrible responsibility connected with the training up of their children. To my mind there is nothing in the world so solemn as the birth of a child, unless it is its death, or departure from this world into that beyond. The mighty vessel has been carefully constructed in the yards, and the day has at last arrived when the majestic ship is to be launched. Let us look for a moment at the beautiful scene! The vessel is gayly decorated with bunting and flowers. Wreathes, most beautiful in construction, decorate the ship, while, flying from its mast-head, may be seen that emblem of American peace and liberty—the stars and stripes. Numerous bands of music enliven the occasion; the most noted speakers have been engaged to pay fitting tribute to the memorable exercises; and as the hull slides from the ways into the sea, a rousing cheer goes up from the assembled multitude, speaking forth their praises to the successful consummation of the enterprise. The deed is done, and the ship rides majestically upon the boundless expanse of waters. The little child is being ushered out upon the great ocean of life, but how different the surroundings! In the case of the ship, its projectors were very careful to have everything exactly favorable. They spared neither labor, time or expense in giving everything a right start. With the child life, how different! Some parents even try to strand the little life upon the shores of cruelty and barbarism, before it is fairly launched. And with others, how careless they are! The little ones need the kind influence of a helping hand to guide them over the shoals of adversity, with which they are sure to come in contact sometime in life. Life to the child is a profound mystery. The little child can ask questions that the great philosophers can not answer. During the very early days of their existence they have no care. Papa and mamma provide for all their wants, and the thought never enters their little heads as to where and how this provision is made. "'Tis well, 'twere thus." Soon enough will they be called upon to battle with the more intricate problems of life, and wise are the parents, indeed, who know how to guide aright.

I dare not accuse parents with willful neglect, but modify the charge to one of carelessness. Many mothers can be found in our land who spend more time caring for their plants, pet cats and poodle dogs than they do with their children. May God have mercy on all such!

Many parents wonder why their children go astray and wander into sin. The question is easily answered. Solomon, the wise man, says: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and, when he is old, he will not depart from it." Did you catch the word "train?" Some parents paraphrase this and say, "bring up," or "raise up," and too often they are "raised up"—by the hair of their head. "Train them up!" Said a Catholic priest at one time, "Give me the child until it is seven or eight years old, and I will teach it truths that you can never efface in after life." How true this is, and how careful we should be that the little one is started right. There are, of course, two methods by which the little one can be started. Let me illustrate: Little Mary comes running in from her play and says: "Oh! mamma! My little playmate, Kitty, is making just a lovely dress for her dolly. Her mamma says if I will get some material she will show me how to make one for my dolly. Won't you, please, give me a thimble, thread and needle and some scraps of cloth?" The mother does not mean to be unkind, but she is busy and, in a very angry mood, snaps out the answer: "No, no; get out of my sight and don't bother me. Don't you see I am busy?" Little Mary is stung by the unkind answer, and, leaving the room, runs out into the orchard, and, throwing herself under a tree, gives vent to her disappointment by convulsive sobs and bitter denunciations of mamma. She cries, "Oh, dear! I wish I had never been born. Why is mamma so unkind to me?" Scene No. 2. The little girl comes to mamma with the same request. The mother cares more for the welfare of her little child than she does for her work, but she is also very busy, and she approaches her daughter by saying: "Yes, Mary, mamma is very busy just now, but will get them in just a moment. By the way, Mary, did you finish learning those Bible verses I gave you this morning?" "No, mamma, I have not quite finished them," says Mary, "but I will do so while I wait for you." The mother has finished her labors in a few minutes, and she hears Mary recite her lesson. Then, taking her little one by the hand, they retire to the closet, and there, shutting the door, she lifts her heart to God in prayer, commending to His care the little one by her side. Little Mary then asks God to bless papa and mamma, and make her a good girl. And there, in that closet, are sown the precious seeds that in after life spring up and bear fruit for the Master's use. How many mothers take time to pray with their children! And, as they emerge from that closet, the tears, so pure they would not stain the face of an angel, are seen falling from the cheek of little Mary, and, as she receives the articles she asks for, runs out to join her little playmate, and what a testimony she gives, "I have got just the best mamma in all the world." Oh, how different from the other scene! Which is the proper course for parents to pursue? Let your own conscience answer.

Another reason why the latter course, or one similar, should be taken is this: The early conversions are the best. An evangelist at one time asked of an audience of, perhaps, 1,000 people that all who were Christians to stand. Half of the congregation arose. Then he asked that all who were converted in childhood, i. e., under 10 years of age, to raise the hand. About 60 per cent did as requested, and he found that 30 per cent were converted between the ages of 10 and 21, 8 per cent between 21 and 40, 2 per cent over 40, while only one in the congregation was converted beyond 60. The teaching is obvious.

Allow me to present another fact for your consideration: Children learn best by example. They are good imitators. Did you ever stop to think that your children are following your footsteps? They are learning to do what you are doing. A father and his little son were walking down the street of a large city one winter morning, after a heavy fall of snow. The father was in the lead, and the son took the father somewhat by surprise by making the statement, "Papa, I am putting my feet right in your tracks." It awoke a train of thought in the mind of the father, and he stopped to ask himself the question, "Where am I leading my son? My God! show the parents of this city where they are leading their children."

You wonder where your little son or daughter learned to tell those frightful untruths. A visitor came into your parlor the other day. She was not a bosom friend, and, as she arose to go, you were very emphatic in your exclamations of the great (?) pleasure her call gave you, and you said to her: "Oh, please, do not go! I am so delighted to have you call! Please, stay to tea." She has the good sense to retire, and, as soon as the door is closed, your children hear you remark, "Oh! the horrid bore! Why don't she stay at home, or move in her own class?" Oh! consistency, truly thou art a jewel! Or, perhaps, you see her before she gets to the house, and, instead of answering the bell yourself, you send the child to the door to utter the sentence, "Mamma is not in." And you wonder where they learn to lie. Children are great imitators. They think the parents are perfect. You ask your little son, "Who is the best man in the world?" and he will surely say, "Why, you are, papa." The little fellow don't know you as well as some of your neighbors do, or he would not answer that way. Ask the daughter, "Who is the best woman in the world?" and surely the answer comes, "Why, you are, mamma." The children can see no fault with you, parents, or they would answer differently. Reiterating the truth that the parents are leading their children. Do you want your children to respect the Sabbath? Then respect it yourself. Do you want your children to attend the church and Sabbath school? Then attend them yourself. How can you expect the children to reverence God and religion and things that are holy when you do not reverence them yourself? Some plead lack of time. Some are taken up so with the pleasures of life that they have no time to inquire what company their children keep, or what books they are reading. Again, many parents, unable, seemingly, to care for their little ones, push them off upon the public school teachers. The teachers are doing a notable work, "training the children," but cannot take the place of the parents. The teachers' work is important. It carries a vast responsibility. How many lives are cursed or blighted by the teachers in our public schools! How fitting the appellation, "Take off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground!"

Again, children are driven from the home influence by the mode of punishment. How pernicious the habit of sending children to bed without supper, because they have broken some home law! Suppose God should withhold the necessities of life every time we disobey Him. If He did, I am afraid some of us would not eat more than once a month, possibly not that often. Another evil habit—that of compelling the child to read a chapter in the Bible as a punishment for some offense. What? Use the Word of God, the book that they should be taught to reverence, as a punishment for crime? God forbid! Again, some parents withhold sympathy from the child, thinking that the little one, in order to gain that sympathy, will conform to your ideas of right. This is an awful mistake. They will never do it. The following illustration is applicable: The little child was very sensitive, so like that little shrinking plant that curls at the breath and shuts its heart from the light. Her only beauties were a transparent skin and large, mournful, blue eyes. The mother had been trained by a harsh, strict and conscientious parent, and thought, of course, this was the only method to pursue with children. So, one day this little one had displeased the parent by twice disobeying. The mother resolved to punish her severely. When bed time came, she put her in her little couch and then remarked: "Now, my daughter, to punish you, and show you how very, very naughty you have been, I shall not kiss you tonight." The child looked at the mother, astonishment personified and, as the mother turned to go away, she noticed the big tears dropping from the cheeks and a quivering of the little, red lips. The mother left the room, but was presently sent for. The little girl came toward that mother, with her little hands outstretched, uttering the plaintive appeal, "Oh, mamma! you will kiss me good-night; I can't go to sleep if you don't." Then came the struggle between love and what the mother falsely termed "duty." Her heart said, "Give her the kiss of peace." Stern nature urged persistence in the correction. The mother knelt by the bedside. "Mother can't kiss you, Ellen," tho' every word seemed to choke her as she spoke. Her little hand touched the mother's, but she drew away, and the child turned her face to the wall. The mother left the room, but was soon recalled by the nurse. She hastened to the bedside, but recoiled aghast at the sight. Little Ellen sat upright in bed, her eyes fairly starting from their sockets, with a bright glassy look that struck a chill of horror to the heart of that mother. Reason from this child had fled, and she knew not her mother. There she sat, uttering the cry, "Oh! kiss me, mamma, do kiss me; I can't go to sleep. I won't be naughty, if you'll only kiss me! Oh! kiss me, dear mamma; I can't go to sleep." The little one did go to sleep soon after that, but it was the sleep that knows no awakening. She passed away without ever knowing her mother. With her last breath, she whispered, "I will be good, mamma, if you will only kiss me." Oh! the remorse of conscience that mother suffered! How much would she have given, could she have recalled the opportunities of that eventful night! Kindness and sympathy are glorious virtues, so don't withhold them from the little ones.

Again, another great evil that creeps into the home is scolding. It grows upon you unawares, and has been the cause of blight in scores of lives. You may think this is plain language. You are right. But it is truth, and is offered in a kindly Christ-like spirit in the interest of the little ones, whom God has given us to raise for His honor and glory. May God add His blessing. Amen.

OBJECTS

TO THE PRICES CHARGED BY COMMISSION MEN.

Stock Buyer—Would it not be well for the legislature of the state of Minnesota to do something towards putting a stop to the outrageous prices charged by commission men to dealers in live stock, who consign stock to them? As is well know, a country buyer must, upon arriving at the stock market, turn his stock over to some commission men to make the sale for him, or, in other words, he must pay an enormous fee to some one for the privilege of making the sale himself. The commission man is entitled to a fee of $18 per load for making this sale. It formerly was $10, but it has lately been raised to $18. Besides this, the shipper must pay an extraordinary high price for everything he must buy in the line of feed for his stock before it is sold. In fact, the charges on a load of stock are so high that a local buyer must either buy on a big margin or else steal about one-half of his load, in order to come out whole on the deal. To cap the climax, the local dealer is almost entirely at the mercy of this organized band of robbers, called commission men. These men will buy and sell to one another and then turn around and sell to actual buyers, and in each instance have a big rake off. This is practiced to such an extent that it makes it almost impossible for a beginner to make a shipment without a loss, however reasonably he may have bought his stock. We would as soon believe that the sun rose in the west and set in the east as to believe that one came out even on his deal. We do not write this as a plea or a defense for the local buyers, but only call the attention of our legislators and the public to the subject, and, if they think it practical and a good thing then to have the stock markets of the Twin cities placed under state supervision, which, to our mind, could not fail to be a great improvement upon the present so-called open stock market.

LEFT PENNILESS.

WHEN HER HUSBAND WAS ARRESTED, SHE HADN'T A CENT.

Mrs. Bisazza, wife of Spiro Bisazza, the bankrupt, who is now in jail at Fergus Falls awaiting trial, is very indignant at the treatment she received at the hands of the United States marshal who placed her husband under arrest. She says that the arrest was made at about 9 o'clock in the evening, as they were about to take the train. After he was placed under arrest, Mr. Bisazza attempted to give his wife some money to pay her night's lodgings in a hotel, but the marshal would not allow him to do so, and Mrs. Bisazza was left to walk the streets without a cent in her pocket with which to procure a bed. She says that, after being out on the street for nearly two hours, not knowing where to go or to whom to appeal, she met, by chance a young man, who formerly clerked in the store, who kindly loaned her enough money to pay for a night's lodging at one of the hotels. She has every faith that, when her husband's case comes to trial, he will be acquitted of all criminal action.

TWO DISTRICTS.

THIS IS THE OPINION OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The assertion has often been made that there could be but one school district in this city, owing to the fact that the city charter provides for there being but one. The question was submitted to the attorney general by a resident of this city, and the following is the reply:

"In your favor of Feb. 18th you submit a question substantially as follows: In the fall of 1896 the village of Thief River Falls and the unorganized village of Red Lake Rapids were incorporated into the city of Thief River Falls, under chapter 8 of the laws of 1895. There were two separate school districts in this territory. Question: Does the consolidation of the city of Thief River Falls and the unorganized village of Red Lake Rapids merge the two school districts?

"In answer to this question, I can state that, in my opinion, such school districts remain separate and distinct. The boundaries of school districts cannot be changed, except by proceedings instituted for such purpose.

"Yours very truly,
"W. J. DONAHOWER,
"Asst. Atty. General."

BE PLEASANT

TO LAND SEEKERS WHO WILL BE HERE IN THE SPRING.

This spring there will undoubtedly be a large number of settlers from the southern part of the state coming to this section, with the view of buying farms. The one thing of great value to Thief River Falls and its prosperity, in the opinion of the writer, is the settlement of the country about it with good, practical farmers. A hundred well improved, well conducted farms on vacant territory tributary to this city would be a source of more wealth and business to the community than any one thing within the range of expediency. When the prospective home buyers arrive, each citizen should endeavor to give them all the information possible. If the vacant land about Thief River Falls is settled up, the city will double in size

A NATIONAL BANK.

THIEF RIVER FALLS MAY HAVE ONE.

The following telegram from Washington appeared in the Minneapolis Journal last Saturday:

"The controller of the currency has approved the application of L. C. Simons, Sven Swenson, J. H. Gralle, J. A. Duffy and Rasmus Oen for authority to organize the First National Bank of Thief River Falls, Minn, with a capital of $25,000."

The local officials of the Scandia State bank state that the new bank will not be organized until next summer, and at that time a brick banking house will be built.

NORTHERN LODGE, NO. 236, A. F. & A. M.

Northern Lodge, No. 236, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, was duly installed in this city last Saturday evening. The work was done by the members of the Crookston lodge, assisted by Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire Masons. After the adjournment of the lodge, a banquet was served at the Hotel Ogahmah by the wives of the local Masons, and this was followed by a musical program rendered by local talent. The affair was highly enjoyable.

The North Carolina experimental station has discovered that the flavor of eggs is determined by the feed. After giving hens chopped onions for two weeks, the eggs became so disagreeable in flavor that they could not be used. Wheat shorts, cottonseed meal and skim milk increased the number of eggs laid, but the eggs had a disagreeable flavor. Cracked corn and corn dough resulted in fewer eggs, but larger ones and of better flavor.

AN OLD-TIMER

Writes About Thief River Falls in the Eighties.

C. C. Knappen in the Crookston Peoples' Press:

"Years and years ago, as the story looks, the writer officiated as wet nurse and sponser on the momentous ocasion of the birth of the first newspaper published at Thief River Falls—the Press—and divided the time with Charlie Robbecke, Frank Kratka, Phil Zeh, Carl Kretzschmar and a few others in playing seven up for the drinks and guessing on the date of the arrival of the railroad, with its varnished 'keers'—the end of the line was then, and had been for several years, at St. Hilaire—one thing we were unanimous on, and that was the future greatness of Thief River Falls. Well, thirteen long and eventful years have passed since then.

"The railroad has long since made its appearance, and the excitement incident to 'seeing the train come in' has passed into a memory. The town has grown and grown until it has surpassed the wildest expectations of the little coterie of enthusiasts who lived there in those early days. It grew into a village, and then burst its bounds and spread out into a city, and still it grew, and, were we a predestinator, we should say that Thief River Falls is destined to become a commercial commercial center of no small importance. The city is located at the conflux of the Thief and Red Lake rivers, the latter stream being navigable for small craft to Red lake, in the midst of the great pine forests in Minnesota. There is already a large saw mill at Thief River Falls, with a capacity of 40,000,000 feet of lumber a year. The city has recently put in its own electric plant, and has long distance telephone connection with the outside world.

"It is expected that eleven townships in the Red Lake Indian reservation, which joins town, will shortly be thrown open for settlement, and, as this is all good agricultural land, it is expected that the opening will witness a big rush of actual settlers to that section.

"One thing I was pleased to note was the fact that nearly all the old-timers were still on earth—and very much alive, all same bee—and have gathered unto themselves many shekels of silver and gold. There is Carl Kretzschmar, now mayor and conducting a profitable hide and fur business. Charlie Robbecke still officiates as mine host of the Hotel Ogahmah, which he has enlarged from time to time to meet the requirements of the growing city—always catering to the wants of hungry humanity in royal style. Phil Zeh conducts a wet goods emporium, while Frank Kratka, having become surfeited with official honors and made his pile, by the rapid advance in real estate, has retired from active life.

Off the Reservation.

The following, from the Crookston Times, would indicate that Henry W. Lee, of this city, has on war paint:

"H. W. Lee, the Thief River attorney, returned last night from a business trip to Grafton, where he investigated a matter of two alleged forged deeds to property in Red Lake county, which seem to have had their beginning and end in Red Lake Falls, and which are likely to cause trouble for some one."

YOUNG MEAT.

Tendency to Finish Off Cattle at an Early Age.

There is an undoubted demand for prime young beef and mutton made ready for the market under conditions that will produce rich, red, tender meat suitable for the consumers of choice goods, says C. W. Jones in The American Cultivator. This meat is difficult to secure in any market, and it is always high priced, for customers who can secure it are willing to pay extra for it. This meat cannot be raised without attention to what is needed. In the case of beef the cattle are not young calves, but animals that are brought to maturity rapidly and finished off perfectly. Old cattle finished off after their third or fourth year do not produce as desirable meat as the year and a half animal brought to maturity under good feeding and care. The proper time to finish off cattle for the fancy market is from 1 to 2 years old. The nearer we can get to the former the better, provided the animal has reached full maturity and weighs about as much as it ever will. It is a question of feeding and breeding, so that the animal grows smoothly and rapidly from the time of its birth to the day it is sold for the fancy market.

Experience has shown that the most profitable age to finish off cattle is from 20 to 24 months. That applies to the average animal and breeder and is a pretty safe rule to go by, but it is possible to finish off very fine cattle in 18 or even 15 months and obtain for them larger profits than those which reach maturity later. It is all a question of breed and breeding. Animals selected for this fancy work should be without blemish and indicate a strong, vigorous constitution from the start. If they possess these merits, they will prove satisfactory at all times. They need good care from the start and should be allowed to suck the mothers until they are ready for weaning, and then they should be fed as liberally as they can stand of highly concentrated food. We are not looking beyond the year and a half period, and, no matter what grave results forced feeding may have later in life, the animals selected for this purpose should have it. The flesh is sure then to be rich and tender. When sucking, the mothers must also be fed liberally on rich, concentrated foods.

The whole question of whether cattle raised in this way will be profitable depends largely upon the market one can send them to. They cannot be classed with ordinary cattle, but must seek a special market where fancy stock is in demand. In nearly every large city there are butchers who make a specialty of securing fine beef cattle. They have a line of customers who demand better meat than can be found in the ordinary cattle yards. One must put himself in touch with this side of the market to make the most of such a specialty.

Wintering Trotters.

Trotters in winter quarters should be given about one-half the feed supplied during the training season. Carrots and bran mash occasionally, good, clean hay and oats twice a day are the most desirable feeds. Let the horses run out of doors every day, and in any event keep the animals from laying on fat, for this must all be worked off when the training season opens.

WANT A RAILROAD

Red Lake People Are After One.

In connection with the commencement of the spring activity along all lines of improvement, there may also be constructed in Minnesota a new railroad, the plans of which are now said to be already under way.

A number of representatives of the Red lake district interests are in Minneapolis for the purpose of interesting local capitalists in pushing an extension of the Great Northern railway from Milac through Mille Lacs and Crow Wing counties on into the Red lake region, to connect finally with the Canadian Pacific.

If the Great Northern company cannot be induced to take the matter up, the promoters will exercise all their influence in prevailing upon the Northern Pacific to hurry the extension of the Brainerd & Northern Minnesota railroad, which is a tributary to the Northern Pacific.

The Brainerd & Northern Minnesota is now being extended from Cass Lake, where it connects with the Great Northern, almost directly northward in the vicinity of Red lake. The promoters claim that the country around the lake, from its southern terminal and running northward, is so rich that its magnitude is not realized by the people of the state.

A direct road from Milac to the Canadian border, passing through the Red lake country, seems to be the ideal dream of the residents of the northern part of Minnesota, as it would make transportation and traffic a number of hours nearer Minneapolis, which is the nearest important distributing market.

A number of prominent local lumbermen have expressed themselves as greatly in favor of the projected plan, and from this source the promoters have been promised hearty support. While the country is by no means as thickly settled as the Black Hills region, which is soon to be tapped by a railroad, it is said to offer inducements in the agricultural and lumber lines not to be compared with that of other sections in this state, or even in the Northwest.—Minneapolis Tribune.

TRIED FRAUD.

Spiro Bisazza Secretly Shipped Goods to Seattle.

Creditors in the Spiro Bisazza bankruptcy case seem to be on the winning side just now, and recent developments not only promise to increase the assets secured by them, but also furnish evidence that may be useful in the proceedings begun against him in court.

Readers of The News will remember reading an account of Mr. Bisazza's arrest, as published in this paper, and that a shipment of goods had been made by Mr. Bisazza, consigned by O. T. Peterson to the same name at Seattle, Wash. Mr. Bisazza was unavoidably detained from going to Seattle, and the goods were not claimed there.

The matter was referred to the agent at Crookston, and by him to Mrs. Bisazza, who was in Crookston a few days since. She ordered the return of the good, and, upon their arrival there, a search warrant was secured, and the officers and representatives of the creditors examined the goods.

The evidence is now indisputable that Mr. Bisazza intended to defraud his creditors, and the goods secured go a long way toward reducing the $10,000 shortage in his stock.

In the shipment attached was found a large quantity of clothing, several hundred fine cigars, a half dozen sets of fancy Haviland china, worth $50 to $60 per set; a large number of silk dress pattern, which have never been opened nor exposed for sale, and other goods, the entire lot amounting to $1,500 in value.

Attachment proceedings have been instituted, and the goods will be held by the creditors as a portion of the assets.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Specially prepared articles on Current Topics, explanatory and instructive, are often just what the newspaper reader wants. Readers of the Minneapolis Journal are to have this advantage. February 18th and the special mail edition for February 19th there appears in that paper the first of a series of articles under the general title of

The Current Topics Club.

Among the subjects to be treated are

"Colonial Governments of To-day," with reference to the colonial questions that confront our own country;

"The Opportunity and the Man," which will show whether the opportunities are all gone;

"The Art of Living a Hundred Years," not a whimsical notion, but a matter of scientific, as well as popular, interest at this time;

"American Life a Century Ago," interesting and instructive comparisons and contrasts with the present;

"The Woman's Club Movement," and what it is really accomplishing, and

"What the Government Does for the People," a valuable and instructive insight into a matter about which the most of us have rather vague notions.

These articles will appear daily in the Minneapolis Journal for at least four months. Back numbers may be obtained for a reasonable time. The Journal containing these articles for three months and a fine map of Minnesota and map of the world for

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.
Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.
It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.
Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.
For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.
THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.
Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.
It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.
While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.
Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

EFFECTIVE WIND BREAK.

An Open Shed Which Has Proved Successful For Years.

The illustration shows a wind break that has been in use for some 16 or 18 years, writes C. P. Reynolds in The American Agriculturist. For actual money invested I believe it is one of the cheapest and most practical buildings that we have. Several years ago we disposed of an old log house. Finding the roof in very good condition, it was determined to use what was necessary of the roofing and sufficient lumber from the ceiling to make a wind break. The open shed shown in the illustration is the result as it appears today after nearly a score years of practical service. The building is 48 feet long and some 10 feet deep. The posts at the rear are about 7 feet high and nearly 10 in front. Plates were laid over the tops of both sets of posts, and the roof, which was put on in four sections, was placed on top of these and spiked. The rear was sided up; also the ends. It makes a most decided difference in the warmth of the yard during rainy and windy weather.

WIND BREAK.

In summer I have known the cattle to come all the way from the back of the pasture in order to stand in its shade. During stormy weather in spring or fall it is generally well filled with cattle protecting themselves from the elements. One can scarcely appreciate the difference that such a protection is to a yard.

This shed covers nearly all of one side of the barnyard. Several years ago, before our silo was put in, corn stover was hauled and placed in a long continuous stack on a second side, which was an additional protection to the yard during windy weather. A great many farmers could profitably follow the wind break stacking and secure protection to stock in the yard during a greater portion of the winter.

A small pen is shown in one end of the shed. This is temporary, being a creep in which grain was put so that lambs could get to it. We have used this device every spring and summer and find it of considerable consequence in rearing good lambs.

Lighter Horses Better.

Farmers who have watched the ease with which the large draft horses handle heavy loads on good roads or city pavements have been led to think that a heavy horse must be the better animal in all cases, and we see many farm teams that are far inferior in the amount of work they can do in plowing or in drawing a load upon soft ground than a much lighter team would do easily. Then the heavy horses are driven over our hilly roads often at a rate of speed that causes them to pound the earth so that the legs give out, and they are quickly lame. It certainly requires more food to sustain a 1,600 pound horse than one weighing from 1,000 to 1,200 pounds, and when not constantly employed drawing heavy loads the amount of work done by the heavy horses does not compensate for the extra cost of maintaining them. As farmers will have next spring to buy horses or many will we advise them to turn their attention to the smaller horses from Canada if they can be found rather than to the Percherons and Shire horses that have been so popular lately. They will cost less prices, cost less to keep, do about as much work and endure much longer.—American Cultivator.

Weather Prophets May Reform.

Willis L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau, believes that the day will come easily within the next century, says the New York Tribune, when such fundamental principles underlying weather changes will have been discovered as will enable us to forecast with accuracy coming seasons.

WINTERING BROOD SOWS.

Two Kinds of Treatment and the Varying Results.

In too many cases the bleak, dreary months do not bring the brood sow the comfort she should have in proportion to what is expected of her, says John M. Jamison in The National Stockman. First she is thin in flesh, her ribs easily counted, and the owner does not have to run his hand along her back to find the joints of the vertebræ; they are easily seen.

She has a wet, cold, damp nest. The only time it is dry is when the weather is cold and dry and the wind driving. She shivers every raw day, whether very cold or not. When cold, she shakes. She would keep warm often rooting, but her owner will not allow this, and she carries rings in her nose that she is not heathenish enough to regard as jewels.

About all she gets to eat oftentimes is ear corn and not too much of that, because her owner fears she will get too fat to do well with her pigs. Sometimes she has only a dry lot for range, with the fence posts and wire for shelter.

From all these opportunities she is expected to bring a good litter of pigs. If she does not, a wail goes up from her owner that his sow or sows did not do well, then ate their pigs or else starved them to death because they did not seem to have any milk. Have we overdrawn the story? For some we have, for many others we have not.

The unfortunate conditions that often surround the brood sow in winter may be charged to three causes—ignorance, which is inexcusable; laziness, which is criminal, and stinginess, which is contemptible. When all these causes are found on one farm, winter for the brood sow is awful tough. When a sow is wintered under any or all these conditions, the owner has no reason to complain if she does no good. In fact, it will be a wonder if she does not fail.

There is another class of brood sows that find winter more enjoyable. They have some of the comforts they should have to meet the expectations of the owner. They have comfortable nests and are rationally fed and are not expected to grow pigs from corn alone, but have other foods that have more of the properties of bone and muscle in them, that strengthen their own frames and go to build up strong frames in the young they are to produce. The food in winter should be as near like she gets in summer as is possible to make it. Yet but few farmers, I fear, make a studied effort to have it so. The sow readily adjusts herself to her surroundings and will make the most of them, but she cannot get comfort where there is none. Neither can she grow a healthy pig if she does not have the food that goes to make such a pig.

Yet on every farm there is the material to make a hog comfortable if the soil will grow the foods necessary for him. The roughness of these foods will give necessary outside comforts if handled right. There is no need that a brood sow pass a tough winter, one that she would dread the whole year, if she had foresight longer than hunger prompts.

How to Make Rabbit Salmi.

Prepare two rabbits same as for panning and place in a baking pan with a slice of onion, a small bay leaf and a stalk of celery chopped fine. Spread plenty of butter over the game and cook half an hour. Remove the meat from the pan. Add two tablespoons more butter, some flour and cook until a dark brown. Then add two cups of hot (not boiling) water and stir and cook until smooth. Add a teaspoon of worcestershire sauce, a dozen stoned olives and a tablespoon chopped gherkins or capers. Place the rabbits again in the pan, cover closely and simmer for 30 minutes. Arrange the meat on a hot platter, garnish with olives and strain the sauce over the meat. Sprinkle a little finely chopped parsley on top.

How to Make Complexion Powder.

Five ounces of powdered talcum, five ounces of best rice flour, two and a half ounces of best oxide of zinc. Perfume with a mixture of bergamot, ylang-ylang and neroli or use merely a drop or two of oil of rose. It can be tinted with powdered carmine. Sift repeatedly by dusting through bolting cloth.

WEANLING COLTS.

Importance of Proper Care During the First Winter.

The first important item in the care of colts through their first winter is to have a good, warm stable, says W. W. Stevens in The American Agriculturist. It is not objectionable to put several colts in one stable if they have plenty of room to move about and lie down at will. Stop all cracks if the barn siding is not tight. If there are any timid ones in the lot that will not assert their rights and crowd in for their rations, better stall them to themselves. Have good water within reach of colts all the while and provide a small lot on the east or south side of the barn where the little fellows can take exercise and sun themselves when the weather is pleasant.

The rations of the colt should be made up mostly of clover hay, oats, oilmeal and bran. A few horsemen can successfully feed considerable corn where there is a blue grass pasture to turn the colts in when the weather will permit. But I would not advise a very liberal use of corn unless the feeder has had considerable experience. Never feed a colt timothy hay. If you have sheaf oats, cut up and mix with bran, making a damp chop in mild weather and dry mixture in cold. Sorghum is a good roughness for colts where it has been provided. Colts will soon learn to drink skimmilk or kitchen slops, and I know of no more profitable way of disposing of same on the farm.

As to the amount of food to be given no fixed rule can be laid down. Give the colt all he will eat three times a day. Be careful and never allow food to accumulate and sour in the trough. Do not allow them to have water that you would not care to drink yourself. Always keep salt by them in a box separate from the feed trough. Once a week give each colt a tablespoonful of sulphur in bran. This will keep them from worms and ward off lice. Examine colts carefully once a week to see that they are free of vermin. When a colt gets lousy he will do no good until relieved of the pests.

I would not waste any time grooming colts during the winter. They need to be kept well bedded with straw, and if there is not a great deal of room in the stable it should be cleaned out every few days. Unless the stable is kept dry the colt is liable to get scratches, and this is a trouble quite difficult to get rid of in winter. Handle the colt often the first winter of his life. This is the time to gentle him down and teach him to lead. A colt not halter broken by the time he is a year old gets wild, and when handling becomes imperative he is as wild as a Texas pony. If when you go into the stable you carry an apple, a lick of salt or something of the kind, the colts soon learn to welcome your coming. Fillies as a rule are more shy than the male colts and need more attention to put them on familiar terms with the feeder or handler. Never allow older horses to run with the colts. They crowd them through doorways, in stalls and corners and are likely to injure them some way or other. Older horses do not like to have colts feed with them and will kick and injure them. Even the mother of a colt does not care to have him around after he has been weaned a few weeks.

Best Hog For Farmers.

My opinion is that the most profitable hog for the general farmer to raise is a hog that can be made to weigh 250 or 300 pounds as early as possible, say at 9 or 10 months of age, says a correspondent of The Prairie Farmer. As to breeds, my choice is the Poland-China. The most favorable time for the young pigs to arrive must be determined by circumstances and the conveniences at hand for caring for them. My experience is the earlier the better, as I find it difficult to get the same growth on a May pig at 9 months as one farrowed in March. I am not prepared to say just why this is so, but one reason undoubtedly is that they are just in time to feed on the young and tender clover and grasses. Where one has not a good warm place for the young pigs and wishes to raise a large number it is probably best and much more convenient to have them farrowed the last of April or May and turn them off at a lighter weight or else keep them through the winter, which takes more care and feed. Another advantage to be gained by early farrow is that if you are an advocate of fall pigs you can wean your pigs at 6 weeks or 2 months old and breed your sows again to farrow about September, or if you do not wish to breed for fall litters your sows may be fattened ready for market at that time, when pork is usually a better price than later. This takes them out of the way and gives a better opportunity to care for the young pigs. The young pigs should be fed liberally with bone and muscle making foods. Oats either ground or whole are an excellent feed for growth. Do not feed corn or other fattening feed till they have made considerable growth, when it is an easy matter to put on fat. If they are pushed too fast in the first place, they will only make a lot of fat little chunks. There are several reasons for getting the pigs to market as soon as practicable. It saves feed, as every experienced feeder knows that the first 200 pounds is much cheaper than the next 200 pounds, and the 100 pounds from 300 to 400 is usually quite expensive.

For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

For the benefit of the Warren Register we will state that the tax rate and valuation is higher in Marshall than in Red Lake county. We don't build court houses over here.

About 95 per cent of the people living in Eastern Marshall county want to join the new county of which Thief River Falls is to be the county seat. And we're willin'.

The inaugural address delivered by President McKinley Monday records the changes that have taken place since he delivered his first address four years ago. It is a capable exposition of this government's position and purposes, and shows how the country has advanced under Republican rule.

Beltrami county has not enough money to buy a postage stamp and the "gang" that has been runing things over there all threaten to throw up their jobs unless the legislature will let them issue some more bonds. It would be a good thing for the people who own land in that county if they did.

How to Cook Sausages.

Sausages are delicious when boiled with rice until both are sufficiently cooked. Whole grains of spice and of black pepper should be put in during the cooking. Another way of serving sausages is to brown them in a pan, then spread them with horse radish and serve on squares of toast. Still another acceptable way of preparing sausages is to wipe the sausages dry, dip them in beaten egg and bread crumbs, put them in the frying basket and plunge into boiling fat. Cook ten minutes.

How to Barbecue Rabbit.

Take a nice fresh rabbit, lay in salt water half an hour, drain dry, gash freely and lard with thin slices of breakfast bacon. Put in a baking pan, pour a cupful of water, cover with another pan and steam until tender. Remove the pan and baste frequently with the following: Four teaspoonfuls of good vinegar, two of mustard, one of currant or any acid jelly, a lump of butter the size of an egg. When brown and savory, serve on a hot dish liberally buttered.

How to Make Mutton Ragout.

Cut the meat in smaller pieces than for a stew. Put into a saucepan a tablespoonful of butter and a tablespoonful of flour and stir over the fire until it is dark brown. Then add for two cupfuls of meat the same quantity of stock, salt and pepper to taste. Boil for an hour and serve. This dish is much improved by adding to it a dozen or more fresh mushrooms about five minutes before removing from the fire.

How to Develop the Figure.

It is said that the following exercises develop the lines of the figure and make walking a graceful performance: Walk on tiptoe, toes slightly outward, with the knees straight, the hands clasped tightly behind the head, elbows as far back as possible. The more tightly the hands clasp the back of the head and the farther back the elbows are held the better the result.

How to Make Rice Batter Cakes.

Add three cups of warm milk to one cup of rice boiled tender and mix smooth. Add four level tablespoonfuls of butter, softened, but not liquid; a level teaspoonful of salt, one and two-thirds cups of white cornmeal, a large tablespoonful of flour and two eggs well beaten. Beat thoroughly and bake in shallow tins in a quick oven for half an hour.

How to Cure Cold Sores.

Cold sores can be checked by applying peroxide of hydrogen, sopping it on with a bit of absorbent cotton. Pure glycerin is also a good remedy. Peroxide of hydrogen is an antiseptic especially adapted to cold sores, as it immediately forms a chemical action with the poisonous discharge.

Lighter Shoes For Horses.

The wear and tear on horseflesh makes quite an item on the farm, and anything that will reduce this friction for the farmer should be welcomed, writes C. T. White in The Prairie Farmer. It has been proved beyond dispute that the average horse is shod with too heavy shoes, and if lighter ones were substituted the animal could do more work with less weariness. Heavy shoes have no particular advantage except for large truck horses on stone roads, where shoes wear out quickly. Even in such cases it is doubtful if too heavy shoes prove of any value. Certainly for farm horses light shoes are much more satisfactory. The effects of such a change are quite noticeable shortly after they are put on, and in a year's time the extra amount of work that is obtained from a horse will more than pay for the shorter time that light shoes may wear. The main object of the shoe is to protect the hoof, and the lighter it can be made and serve its purpose the better it is for the horse. A good part of the year horses on the farm would be better off without shoes, and they can do plowing and similar work in soft fields without in any way injuring the feet. In winter, when the ground is frozen, it is quite different, and shoes seem necessary at these times. A horse weighing 1,100 pounds should generally be shod with shoes not weighing more than 12 to 15 ounces each. If 4 ounces are added to each shoe, the total difference in the animal's shoes is 16 ounces. In plowing, cultivating, mowing and reaping a farm horse will walk from 10 to 20 miles a day. If it takes about four feet each step, the horse will lift half a pound extra on its two feet, or 600 pounds, in every mile. If we make the average day's work 15 miles, the horse will lift 9,000 pounds extra a day, or nearly five tons. The energy required to lift this amount is wasted and serves no useful purpose. If it could be expended in doing extra work that would pay, it would nearly pay the animal's keep. Leg weary horses are common on the farm, and leg weary horses are apt to break down in time and have crooked and ailing limbs. It is not only a matter of humanity, but one of profit, to lighten the horse's burden all we can, and this is one good way.

Farm Cattle.

It is not true that the cattle business to be profitable must be conducted on the broad ranges of the western plains, says Texas Farm and Ranch. That is one profitable system of cattle raising, but there is another which yields fully as great profits for the capital invested. Raising cattle on the farm has in all countries and all ages been found profitable, and more so now than ever. By raising cattle on the farm the farmer has a good market for all the feed he can raise, saves labor and expense of transportation and avoids much loss from waste and the hocus pocus of commerce. And one of the main features of stock farming is that it can be made to continually improve the fertility and value of the farm.

Exercise For Hogs.

To produce the best pork hogs should have exercise. A lazy, sleepy hog may fatten faster, but the flesh will not be so good.

DON'T OBJECT

To Giving Us a Part of Marshall County.

In commenting upon the proposition of forming a new county out of the eastern part of Marshall county and the northern part of Red Lake county, of which Thief River Falls would be the county seat, the Warren Sheaf, in part, says:

"A movement has been on foot, originating in Thief River Falls, to detach the eastern part of Marshall county, and with this territory and a portion of Red Lake county to form a new county, with Thief River Falls as the county seat. That Marshall county will be divided some day is very evident, but whether the time is ripe for such a movement is a question. Whenever the majority of the people in the eastern part of the county desire to be set off, the people of Warren and the western part of the county will, we believe, interpose no objection, but, on the other hand, will assist them in forming a county of their own."

ONCE MORE.

Red Lake Falls Is Visited by a Destructive Fire.

Another severe, if not serious, conflagration has reduced a considerable portion of Red Lake Falls' business property to ashes. Fire broke out in that city at 11 o'clock Sunday night, and, before it could be brought under control, had destroyed a row of frame structures that housed five of the men engaged in business there.

The origin of the blaze was in a meat market adjoining the office of P. E. Pirath, loans and insurance. The building, like all the others consumed, was of wood, and offered with the stock the best opportunity for a successful conflagration. The fire apparatus could not be brought into successful use promptly, and, before a stream was thrown, the meat market was consumed, and the adjoining buildings, occupied by Mr. Pirath and by Fred Borchers as a saloon, were also ablaze.

These burned, together with the real estate office of S. A. Swanson and another meat market, making a total of five buildings.

H. B. Kaufer owned two of the buildings burned and carried a fair insurance. The tenants also had some insurance upon their fixtures and stock, which will lighten the burden of loss. It is not known just how the fire originated.

THE RUSH

Will Commence in About a Month.

With the approach of spring, the expected influx of immigrants to the Red river valley lands has begun, and it shows evidence of the rush that will certainly exceed all records made in previous years.

An idea of the extent of this expected immigration was given the Times today by Wilkinson, who brings information that during the week just closing the car accountant at the company's general offices in St. Paul has sent 100 cars to various points in Iowa, where they will be loaded with stock, machinery and emigrant movables that are being shipped up into the Red river valley. In addition to this, orders for fifty more cars have already been booked, and they will be forwarded as soon as they can possibly be moved.

Nor is this all. The company's accountant says that from the reports received at the freight department, the indications are that a thousand cars of emigrant movables will be brought out of Iowa during the month of March and consigned to points on the Great Northern, and that by far the greater number of them will bring homeseekers' supplies to the Red river valley.—Crookston Times.

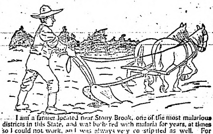
WINCHESTER REPEATING ARMS CO., NEW HAVEN, CONN.



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and I was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

AN INSTITUTE

For Farmers Will Be Held March 18-19.

There is a great treat in store for the farmers living in the vicinity of Thief River Falls, for on the afternoon and evening of Monday, March 18, and Tuesday morning, March 19, a farmers' institute will be held here in the city hall. The meeting will be conducted by Hon. T. A. Hoverstad, superintendent of the state experimental farm, assisted by Hon. A. J. Glover, instructor of the Minnesota State dairy school at St. Anthony Park, and the topics to be discussed will be relative to livestock raising, dairying, grain, grasses, forage crops, etc. These gentlemen are practical and experienced farmers and can give the people of this vicinity many valuable pointers upon the successful raising of grains, etc. Every farmer should make it a point to attend, as it is not often they have the opportunity to attend meetings of this nature. Everything is free. Prof. James Wilson, Ira C. Richardson and Dr. Cummerford will be among the local residents who will also address the meeting.

Land Office Business.

The monthly statement for February to be sent to be sent to Washington of the business done at the United States land office at Crookston shows a healthy condition of affairs. The homestead filings number 100, against 107 last year. Final proofs reach the figure of 49, as compared to 37 in February, 1900, and cash entries are 26, against 16 for that month. The total cash receipts are $6,300.79 for the month just closed, and for February, 1900, they amounted to $4,875.69. The number of contests that have been started recently is very large, and adds considerable to the volume of work in the office.

ED. L. HEALY LAND AND LOAN COMPANY.

M. K. Wall, manager of the Ed. L. Healy Land and Loan Company, can be found at his new quarters in the Hanson building, where he will be pleased to consult with those desiring to sell or contemplating the purchase of farm or city property.

We have convinced people from the southern part of this state and other states that those lands offer to the poor man the chance of a lifetime to secure a home where the country abounds in game and the lakes and rivers teem with fish of many varieties, amidst flourishing settlements, near schools and churches and close to railway markets, in one of the most healthful localities in the world.

We have already secured the promise of hundreds of homeseekers whom we expect this spring. So, any one having farms or city property for sale is invited to call. We buy and sell property. We are here for that purpose. Call and see us.

"The Art of Living a Hundred Years," not a whimsical notion, but a matter of scientific, as well as popular, interest at this time;

"American Life a Century Ago," interesting and instructive comparisons and contrasts with the present;

FOOD FOR HOGS.

Experiments Showing the Value of Various Roots.

Messrs. C. S. Plumb and H. E. Van Norman of the Indiana experiment station have published details of valuable tests of roots as food for pigs. In 1898 as high as 24.25 tons of mangel wurzels per acre were produced at the station at a cost of about 85 cents per ton when tested. Their feeding value was tested with 12 pigs of ordinary breeds. The pigs were weaned only two days before the beginning of the test, when they were about 3 months old. They were divided into lots, each lot containing three males and three females. The test began Feb. 1 and closed April 19, 1899. The pigs were confined in small lots 15 by 30 feet in size, with a comfortable shelter house in each. Lot 1 was fed on slop consisting of corn and shorts, one to two, and cut mangel wurzels ad libitum. Lot 2 was fed on cornmeal and shorts only. The pigs were supplied with water, ashes and salt. Weighings were made at the end of each week. At the beginning of the test the average weight of the pigs in the two lots was 44 pounds and 46 pounds respectively. Each lot consumed 3.71 pounds of meal and shorts per pound gain. In addition to the grain ration lot 1 ate 514 pounds of mangel wurzels during the test. The authors compute the amount of digestible nutrients in the ration eaten: "The mangels were fed only as eaten up clean, and the pigs did not eat them with the relish that might have been anticipated. The cut roots were mixed with the grain slop, and the pigs would clean up the slop in preference to the roots as a general rule, eating the latter quite leisurely. It required exactly the same amount of cornmeal and shorts to make a pound of gain with each lot."

The authors continued the experiment from April 19 to June 7 in order to determine whether a succulent ration had any beneficial after effects, each lot being fed on a ration of cornmeal and shorts. The average weight of the pigs in lot 1 at the beginning of this test was 113.3 pounds and of those in lot 2 120.1 pounds. The average daily gains were 8.30 and 8.53 pounds respectively. The pigs in lot 1 required 4.44 pounds of grain to make a pound of gain; those in lot 2 4.30 pounds. If the mangels were of value in the feeding, the figures show it in only a small way. The mangel fed pigs were no more healthy at any time than were those not so fed, while the cost of producing flesh with them was slightly more than with the others. The difference, however, was so slight that a redistribution of the pigs or a substitution of another in lot 1 might have reversed the results. The writers feel that roots in some form are a desirable food for pigs in winter as an addition to the grain ration in promoting healthy activity of the digestive organs and acting as an appetizer. Sugar beets, artichokes or carrots would no doubt serve this purpose better than mangels. They are more expensive in view of greater cost of production, but this difference is not important.

Shelter From the Weather.

In all flocks, especially those fed in the open, as on the range, where complete protection is costly and economy leads one to submit to moderate losses rather than to avoid these at much greater cost, there will be need to provide some shelter in some way, says The Sheep Breeder. English and Scotch shepherds do this by greasing the fleece, so that cold rain is easily shed before it can reach the skin and chill the sheep. This may be done with small flocks, but on a large scale will cost more than it will come to, but still the subject may be worth attention and made applicable whenever it may be possible. Profit is the main object, and necessarily it is not possible to wholly avoid losses from unavoidable accidents. But it should be considered that the condition of the sheep has much to do with its ability to resist unwelcome conditions, and thus it should be the serious object of all concerned to maintain to the highest possible degree the condition and stamina of the flock as the winter approaches. But in regard to the matter of profit it may be considered that it is not only the saving of a few sheep, but the preservation of the health and condition of the whole band, upon which the final return must come, that is at stake. It is scarcely possible to be minute in detail, but the principal involved is to be made a matter of careful study, as it may be controlled by circumstances.

Small Barnyards Are Best.

From an economic standpoint most barnyards are too large, says L. N. Snook in The American Agriculturist. The loss of fertility is far greater in a large than in a small one. This loss is not so noticeable in newly settled fertile sections of the country as in states east of the Mississippi river, where the once fertile land has been robbed of its organic matter. Thousands of farmers lose every year in keeping the stock in large yards during the feeding season enough fertility to equal in value a ton or more of the most expensive commercial fertilizer. If the yard is large, with a high, dry place at one side, the stock will congregate there, and the richest droppings are lost by being trampled in and mixed with the soil, unless the surface soil is all hauled to the field, which it would often pay to do. Many yards extend to the creek or are located on a hillside. From there the loss is also heavy, unless the washings extend over a pasture or cultivated field. The better plan is to make the yard as small as possible consistent with convenience; also have it protected by roof to a great extent. The saving of fertility and comfort to stock will pay a big annual interest on the investment.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

NO MORE FUSION.

Populists Want to Go It Alone on the National Ticket.

The Populist state committee has gone on record as opposed to the further fusion of national tickets. The session was attended by about forty members and was reported to be harmonious. There was an effort to have the non-fusion resolution include state and local tickets, but this was voted down. A committee was appointed to draft a circular letter to be sent to party workers all over the state, urging them to make preparation for the next campaign. The committee consists of Z. H. Austin, M. J. Daly, Victor E. Lawson, T. E. Meighen and W. R. Hodges. The belief was freely expressed by members of the committee that fusion had more to do with the defeat of the national ticket last year than any other factor.—Minneapolis Journal.

TO LEND MONEY

To Purchase Seed Grain for the Farmers.

The legislature last Saturday came to the relief of the farmers of this state whose crops were destroyed by drouth or storms during the season of 1900, and who were thereby rendered unable to buy sufficient grain for seed purposes. Under suspension of the rules, the senate passed Senator J. H. Smith's bill authorizing the state to loan the farmers in need of assistance the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be required, for the purpose of enabling them to purchase seed grain. The bill also passed the house.

The bill provides the following modus operandi of distributing the loans and imposes the following conditions:

Any farmer desiring to avail himself of the benefits of this act shall make an application in writing, verified by his oath, stating the number of acres of grain he had in crop in the season of 1900, and the number of acres destroyed by drouth, hail or other storms, the number of acres owned or occupied by him and which he intends to sow or plant to crops in the season of 1901, and the number of bushels and kinds of grain necessary to seed the same, which application he shall file with the auditor of the county in which he resides. It shall be the duty of the county auditor to file all such applications by him received, and on or before March 15, 1901, he shall give public notice by publication in the official paper in the county, for at least one week before the day of meeting, that the county commissioners of said county will meet at his office at a date to be named in said notice, for the purpose of considering the applications which may be received on or before the day of such meeting. The board of county commissioners shall meet at the date so fixed by the auditor and consider all such applications, and make all necessary inquiries into the circumstances of each applicant to ascertain that his case comes within the intent of this act, and thereupon shall, by resolution, fix the amount of money to be allowed to each applicant for the purchase of seed grain and the total amount for which said county makes applications; and the said county auditor shall forthwith transmit a copy of said resolution to the state auditor, who shall file the same in his office, and such resolution shall be deemed and taken to be an application by said county for a loan to it from the state, for the amount specified in said resolution, and an agreement on the part of said county to repay the amount received by said county, with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum; provided that no applicant who has, or is able to buy, sufficient grain for seeding purposes shall be granted any aid under the provisions of this act.

'TWILL HIT US.

The Proposed Canadian Duty on Lumber.

Minnesota lumbermen are greatly interested in the progress of the lumber lobby at Ottawa, which is urging upon the Canadian government a restoration of the import duty on lumber. The restoration of the Canadian duty means a loss of trade to Minnesota.

Since the prairie country west of Winnipeg began to develop rapidly, the demand from that quarter for lumber has been large. Minnesota mills, especially those at Crookston, St. Hilaire, Thief River Falls, Cass Lake, Bemidji, Cloquet, East Grand Forks and the head of the lakes, have cut into the trade. Their principal competitors have been the big Canadian mills in the Lake of the Woods country, and so keen has been the competition of the Yankee that the Canadian manufacturers have been forced to ask protection from Ottawa.

GOOD ADVICE

To the Farmers of the Red River Valley.

A well known farmer, who was in the city yesterday, and who is one of those who is always forehanded with all his work, stated that the farmers generally should remember that spring was rapidly approaching, and that it was high time to get in readiness for the seeding time. He said that it was remarkable how many farmers there were who, year after year, neglected getting ready for work till the time arrived to begin work, and when there was a necessary delay of all the way from a week to ten days. There is a vast amount of work on a farm, he stated, that should be done before the ground was fit to receive the seed. He emphasized the fact that none but the cleanest of seed should be sown, and that this season of the year, when there is little else to do, all farmers should see to it that there was not the slightest trace of foul seed in the grain that was to be sown. Harnesses should be oiled before they are used, and everything fixed up in first-class shape, so that, when work began, there would be no interruptions that could have been avoided by a little labor at this time. He stated that there were more farmers who would have to buy their seed grain this spring than for a number of years past, and, for this reason, they should purchase it at once, rather than wait till the last moment, take inferior seed and not be able to clean it in good shape. The suggestions made are worthy of consideration.

Talk of Establishing One in This City.

A number of ladies will meet at the residence of Mrs. J. J. Crowe tomorrow afternoon and discuss the advisability of establishing a free public library in Thief River Falls. This city is large enough to support an institution of this character, and the ladies should be encouraged by the public in general. A donation can probably be secured from Andrew Carnegie.

BY JOHN W. EASTMAN.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

A FEW of the guileless Indians up at the Red lake, who still wear the blanket and are not acquainted with Congressman Eddy, are afraid that the Commercial Club of this city will steal a few townships from their reservation, and have written a communication to the Crookston Times. The proposition which the Commercial Club and Congressman Eddy have considered in order to secure the opening of this land has been a very fair one and would give the Indians a reasonable price for their land. There is no need of getting excited.

IF the state dispensary bill should pass in the Minnesota legislature, and successfully run the gauntlet of the courts, there would be merry times. It has frequently been stated by persons who are presumably well informed that, if a local option measure were submitted to it, Polk county would vote "no license." Should that occur under the proposed dispensary law, East Grand Forks, which now has some thirty saloons, would be limited to one place where liquor could be obtained in packages only, and which could not be equipped with any of the furnishings of a saloon. There seems to be little chance of the passage of the bill, but, if it should pass, things would be made pretty interesting.

IN an article in the March number of the North American Review on the "Business Situation in the United States and the Prospects for the future," Mr. Charles R. Flint, treasurer of the United States Rubber company, sets forth some extraordinary facts and figures illustrative of the present abounding prosperity of the country. The balance of trade in our favor for 1900 was $649,000,000—which means that every minute $1,300 is posted to our credit on the books of the world. Europe is alarmed, and no wonder! But the suggested expedient of a "European Economical Alliance" to check our growth would be futile, inasmuch as Europe is dependent upon us for necessities, while she sends to us only the luxuries; and even these in constantly diminishing volume. The growth of our manufactures during the past two or three years has been phenomenal, our manufactured exports during the last two years having been 40 per cent more than during the previous two years; and these exports have gone, in the main, to countries where wages average 40 per cent less than here. We are now lenders, instead of borrowers, of money; our currency having been established on a stable basis; and the only circumstance which prevents our taking from England the position of the financial center of the world is that England has prodigious investments in the United States. The future has even greater developments in store for us, and the time is coming when our commerce across the Pacific will be as heavy as it is today across the Atlantic. Apart from our vast natural resources and the mechanical perfection of our machinery, to what must this prosperity be attributed? Mr. Flint answers:

"The system of centralized manufacture, that has found so firm a place with us, permits for numerous reasons the highest perfection of special machinery and processes. The factory running on full time, on large volume, reduces the percentage of working charges. Direct sales on a large scale minimize the cost of handling. There is an improved system of distribution which reduces aggregate stocks, and thereby saves shop-wear, storage, insurance and interest. Consolidated management results in fixing the standards of quality, the best standards being adopted; in avoiding waste and financial embarrassment through overproduction; in minimizing loss by bad debts through comparisons of credit, and in securing the advantages of comparative accounting and comparative administration. The European wage-earner, instead of welcoming labor-saving machinery, as our workmen have done, has persistently tried to retard its general use, and the result has been that wages have been lower in Europe. The American workman has received more because he has produced more, and this is the great reason why, notwithstanding our high wages, we are so rapidly extending our trade with foreign markets."

A meeting held in the town of Ringbo last Saturday for the purpose of discussing the advisability of establishing a creamery in that town resulted in a straw ballot being taken upon the proposition of joining the new county. PAN-AMERICAN STOCK

GREAT DISPLAY OF ANIMALS AT THE EXPOSITION.

Breeders From All Sections of the Western Hemisphere Will Participate — Increasing Demand For American Horses, Cattle, Sheep and Hogs.

Superintendent Frank A. Converse, in charge of the divisions of agriculture and live stock and dairy products at the Pan-American exposition, Buffalo, 1901, intends to have the exhibits in these departments show the very latest and best achievements in these industries.

"I have invited," says Mr. Converse, "the boards of agriculture of all states and countries of Pan-America, all live stock and dairy associations, all cheese manufacturers, all wool growers, all swine breeders, all poultry and pet stock associations, beekeepers and representatives of every other industry belonging to the farm to lend a hand in this broad undertaking in order that the best methods, best appliances, best breeds, may be brought forward to the notice of all and for the benefit of all.

FRANK A. CONVERSE.

"In the division of live stock a cash budget of $40,000 is offered in premiums, and every breed of domestic animals will be recognized and classified in such a way that the winners will be amply rewarded for the time and expense of making an exhibit in any of these classes. The time has come when the breeders recognize the opportunities offered by a great exposition as a business proposition, and it cannot be ignored. The increase of sales from such exhibits is well known to every up to date stockman. This fact will have special influence in the case of the Pan-American exposition, as the new colonial possessions of the United States as well as the many countries of South and Central America are already turning their eyes toward the live stock industries of the United States as a source from which they can buy animals of the most improved breeding to build up the stock industry of their countries.

"All of the live stock associations of America have interested themselves in this exposition, with a view to further interesting exhibits of their particular breeds, and are offering special prizes in connection with those given by the exposition company simply for the reason that they realize the importance of the live stock exhibit at Buffalo.

"Sheep, swine and horses are likewise in great demand in other countries. The outlook for the breeders of sheep for mutton and wool purposes was never better, while the breeders of swine have attained such a degree of perfection in breeding pigs for meat purposes that the choice breeds are constantly sought for in the markets of the world. In the last few years there has sprung up an unexpected market for American cavalry horses. The great horse markets of Buffalo and Chicago are constantly besieged by foreign buyers picking up all the available animals for continental Europe. There has been such a demand for these animals that the price has advanced 40 per cent within the last two years. Perhaps the automobile may have made some difference with the horses, but there is still a great demand from the eastern markets for these animals, and the prices are being maintained in a way that is encouraging to the people in this line of horse breeding, and, considering all these things, the opportunities for exhibiting at Buffalo with a view to familiarizing more people with the animals produced in the different states should appeal to every one interested."

Finishing Hogs.

For finishing hogs for market no food substance known equals corn. Alfalfa, clover, Bermuda, sorghum, artichokes, sweet potatoes and peanuts are all good food to promote growth and make lean meat, but corn for adding the plumpness that makes porkers sell cannot be improved upon as far as is at present known. We can raise more corn than all the hogs in the world can eat and raise hogs enough to eat all the corn we can grow. This is a fact, not a paradox.—Texas Farm and Ranch.

Importance of Good Rams.

The ram is the head of the flock in every sense of the word. In choosing a ram the head should be the chief object of study, for the head is the most prominent part of the animal.—Sheep Breeder.

LAMBS FOR MARKET.

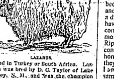
Profit In Feeding Near the Large Cities.

Many stock farmers near the large cities are now purchasing and feeding lambs for the winter and spring markets, says C. T. Bigelow in The American Cultivator. They do not raise these lambs, but purchase them from the great sheep ranges of the west, southwest and northwest. Sheep raisers of these large ranges do not find it profitable to feed the lambs direct for the market, and even if they did not fatten them up they might lose half their weight in transit and thus cause a loss to the shippers. It has been found that these lambs can be more profitably fed nearer the markets. Besides, on the great sheep ranges there are not the necessary foods and facilities for feeding the lambs for market, and it would be a waste of time and energy to attempt to prepare the animals for the market.

The farmers who have undertaken to feed these young lambs for the market have made a specialty of the business, and they have so far found it a profitable industry. They are purchased all the way from $2.10 to $3.50 per 100 pounds, with the freight paid to certain points, generally half the way to the large markets. The sheep provides sufficient food to keep the lambs in good condition until arrival. A carload of these lambs is received by a feeder, who immediately proceeds to feed each one with the idea of fattening it as quickly as possible for the market. The lambs are housed under sheds where they can receive all necessary protection from inclement weather and are fed on good corn, hay, alfalfa and roots. Feeding is reduced to a system, and the feeder becomes an expert in lamb troubles. He is able to single out any creature that is sick and by doctoring it carefully for a few days is generally able to return it to the flock strong and vigorous once more. Loss in the lambs is thus very small, and it is only by eliminating the danger of loss through sickness and accident that the business is made profitable. Scab and other diseases are watched for carefully, and its appearance in the flock is the signal for instant dipping. Lambs are bought in the fall and early winter, sometimes up as late as January; then the animals are fattened for the February, March and April markets, the most profitable ones of the year. All are bought when from 4 to 8 months old and are kept in the feeding places from four to eight weeks. In this time their weights on an average are increased about one-third, and the feeders receive from $5 to $8 per hundred weight, according to the market and season, thus realizing a profit in higher prices and from heavier lambs.

King of Angoras.

America has developed an Angora buck of the highest quality, which is a great victory for those who claim that we can breed as good stock as can be found in Turkey or South Africa. Lazarus was bred by D. C. Taylor of Lake Valley, N. M., and was the champion at the recent Kansas City show. He was sold at auction to Colonel C. S. Richardson of Dubuque, Ia., for $700, the record price for an American bred Angora.



LAZARUS.

Sheep In All Ages.

Sheep are the earliest live stock of which we have any history and have been kept and improved from that day to this by the most civilized nations in the world, says Texas Farm and Ranch. This timid animal, the type of meekness and purity, has no doubt had much to do with the moral elevation of men in all ages. Abel was a keeper of sheep and brought to the altar of the Lord the firstlings of his flock, and the fat thereof and lambs were the most frequent sacrifices of the ancient Jews. The felting of the wool and the wearing of cloth from it was evidently one of the earliest arts of man. This animal has always exerted an ameliorating influence on man, enriching the soil, as well as feeding and clothing the race, especially in all but the warmest climates. There are many varieties, both wild and domesticated, the differentiation in domestication being in the direction of mutton growing and wool growing, many of the best mutton breeds being also producers of heavy fleeces of useful if not fine wools, for there are many purposes for which the finest grades of wool are not suited. Sheep have always and in every civilized country been found fairly profitable. But it is as a farm animal rather than a ranch animal that they develop their finest traits, for thus kept they can be given the careful treatment that their nature demands. On most farms where there are no sheep a small flock would be a source of profit from their mutton and wool, but the effect of their droppings upon the soil would fully pay for the care they require. The writer once covered seven acres of medium sandy soil with sheep pens, and the land, cultivated for 13 successive years in corn and cotton alternately, yielded an average of 515 pounds of lint cotton and 40 bushels of corn without another pound of fertilizer. One year the seven acres yielded nine bales of 512 pounds each. Our people should keep fewer dogs and more sheep.

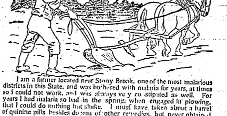
WINCHESTER REPEATING ARMS CO., NEW HAVEN, CONN.



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

In a letter to THE NEWS, he states that he is sorry for the people living back here with the ice and snow, while he is basking in the sunshine and wearing a straw hat.

The following, taken from the Minneapolis Journal, under a Washington date line, will be of local interest, inasmuch as the children referred to are residents of this city: "Representative Eddy has requested an investigation into the conduct of affairs at the Morris, Minn., Indian school. Mr. Eddy said the action of Superintendent Johnson in placing the two children of a French woman in the Morris school was unwarranted."

LOTS OF TROUBLE.

GAME WARDENS ARRESTED THREE HUNTERS.

Six game wardens last week raided the taxidermist shop of Geo. Wilcox and Henry and Geo Cook, capturing about $2,200 worth of moose, deer and caribou heads, together with meat and hides. The camp is located about 50 miles northeast of here, and it required two teams to take it to Warren, the game wardens fearing that, if they came to Thief River Falls, there would be trouble, as the boys arrested have many friends here.

When the news of the arrest was received here, a number of local parties, who claimed to own some of the heads captured, got out a writ of replevin, and Chief Benzie, accompanied by J. M. Perkins and Will Cook, went to serve it upon the game wardens, whom they met near Germantown. The game wardens resisted the writ, and a tussel ensued, in which the local men came out second best, and they were handcuffed, loaded on sleds and taken to Warren, where they were placed in jail for a few hours, and afterwards released.

The game was shipped Monday to St. Paul, and the prisoners were taken to Bemidji and will be tried March 20.

An attempt was made to arrest the game wardens, but this proved unsuccessful. Upon the complaint of Mrs. Ed. Wilcox, a warrant was issued by Judge Tarrant for the arrest of three of the game wardens, the charge being that they assaulted her. Attorney Lee, W. C. Smiley, John Kivel and Sam Heasley went over to Warren with the warrant, and later they were reinforced by Sheriff Sampson. The warrant was served upon the parties, but they refused to accompany the sheriff, although they have promised to come here and answer the charge.

There will probably be considerable trouble over the matter before everything is straightened out. The Minneapolis Journal states that Executive Agent Sam Fullerton will endeavor to have Sheriff Sampson removed from office, charging him with interfering with state officers in the discharge of their duty, and it is also said that other game wardens will return to this section and arrest other parties who have violated the game laws.

A Creamery at Ringbo.

Last Saturday evening a very enthusiastic meeting of the farmers of Ringbo was held at the home of Jens Offerdal, for the purpose of discussing the feasibility of forming an association for building and operating a creamery at that place. John H. Graslie, of the Scandia State Bank, and former graduate of the state agricultural college, and M. K. Wall were present.

The meeting was called to order by M. K. Wall, who, in a few well-chosen remarks, outlined the purpose of the meeting, stating that he could read by their countenance and in the interest taken in this new project that farming was not so profitable with them as it ought to be, and that men of brains were turning their attention to other pursuits than wheat growing; that he regretted very much that he was not posted on the creamery business, but was fortunate to have a man who was well schooled in it. Mr. Graslie was then called to the chair, and for about three hours underwent a very severe examination concerning the subject; and, indeed, he showed himself to be a thorough master of it—going over it and dealing with it in every detail.

After discussing the question in all its aspects, a committee of five were appointed to draft articles of association and adjourned to meet at same place the next Saturday evening.

Inasmuch as there were a large number—about forty—of representative people from the town there present, Mr. Wall addressed them briefly concerning county division, and endeavored to ascertain their feeling of the matter, and out of the whole number only one opposing voice was heard.

CURRENT TOPICS.
Specially prepared articles on Current Topics, explanatory and instructive, are often just what the newspaper reader wants. Readers of the Minneapolis Journal are to have this advantage. February 18th and the special mail edition for February 19th there appears in that paper the first of a series of articles under the general title of
The Current Topics Club.
Among the subjects to be treated are
"Colonial Governments of To-day," with reference to the colonial questions that confront our own country;
"The Opportunity and the Man," which will show whether the opportunities are all gone;
"The Art of Living a Hundred Years," not a whimsical notion, but a matter of scientific, as well as popular, interest at this time;
"American Life a Century Ago," interesting and instructive comparisons and contrasts with the present;
"The Woman's Club Movement," and what it is really accomplishing, and
"What the Government Does for the People," a valuable and instructive insight into a matter about which the most of us have rather vague notions.
These articles will appear daily in the Minneapolis Journal for at least four months. Back numbers may be obtained for a reasonable time. The Journal containing these articles for three months and a fine map of Minnesota and map of the world for

MUTTON MAKING.

Increase in the Demand For Superior Sheep Meat.

The development of the sheep feeding industry has been the subject of frequent comment, says The Breeder's Gazette, and it has been repeatedly pointed out that it is due to the introduction of the blood of the distinctly mutton breeds. Feeders were not long in learning that the crosses of this blood would not only give them a sheep that would feed better and take on more weight for the amount of provender consumed, but would also produce a sheep that would sell for a better price on the market. Butchers gradually came to be able to give their customers a taste of the "real article," and few palates there are that do not quickly acquire a liking for well bred, well fed and well cooked mutton. In consequence of this improvement in the quality of the lamb chop and leg of mutton consumers have increased their purchases until mutton has come to form a very prominent feature on the American bill of fare. There is no more wholesome, nourishing and satisfying meat food, and as people will eat meat in ever increasing quantities the men who make the mutton have every prospect of a strong and expanding market.

In the past quarter the receipts have been tremendous, as was clearly indicated by the number of sheep that were put on feed, but so great has been the demand that the market has cleaned up these enormous receipts in very good fashion. Large numbers have gone back to the country for the feed lots, but the slaughter houses have absorbed arrivals of fat sheep to a degree almost record breaking. With the combined demand from killers and feeders it has resulted that the market the present year has experienced fewer gluts than ever before, a fact that tells the story in the fewest possible words. It is, of course, possible that this industry may be overdone. Indeed many were of the opinion that the thousands of sheep sent to feed last fall would prove the undoing of the industry, but the market rises to meet the conditions of increased production, and with the present earning capacity of our people there is no reason to doubt a continued enlargement of the demand for legs, saddles and chops. At the same time it behooves breeders to continue their work of improvement by the selection of the best obtainable rams and for feeders to study with the greatest care the problem of the selection of foods best adapted to put on weight with the greatest economy. The demands of the market place are ever more exacting. Better quality of product is constantly required. Tastes grow more fastidious with education and must be catered to. Producers cannot rest content on past achievements. The effort must always be for better quality produced at less cost.

Danger of Interbreeding.

The moral law laid down by the ancient moralists made it a crime to breed an animal to its progeny, says The Sheep Breeder. It even forbade to use the ewe's milk to cook a lamb or a kid in. We cannot help but think that the end and intention of every one of those old laws were for the good and advantage of mankind. There could be no other intention, for it mattered nothing to the animals concerned. We must think, then, that the too close breeding of animals was opposed because it was not for the advantage of the race. And this we find to be the fact. There is a degrading effect apparent at once, and if it is continued the race is destroyed. This we find in our own experience. We know how cows have been ruined by too close breeding, how sheep have deteriorated, and in regard to the human race science has proved over and over again that the marriage of cousins is detrimental, so much so that the practice is opposed by law in some places and by common consent in all places. That noted breeder of sheep, Bakewell, in the rearing of the Leicester breed made a glaring mistake in breeding too close and set back the progress of it for several years until the weak blood was refreshed by more healthful crosses with unrelated animals. Those interested in sheep are apt to disregard this fact and think, as an old shepherd once remarked, "Any old ram is good enough to get a lamb," although it may be the father of the ewe for several generations. This mistake should not be made under any circumstances. Once it happened to the writer that he was consulted in regard to the degradation of a flock of sheep that were once well wooled, hearty, strong and prolific. After several years the ewes aborted, if, indeed, they ever got in lamb, and the wool shrank and decreased in quality over one-half. The owner claimed it was the sea air, which was too cold, by which the depreciation was caused, but on hearing the circumstances he was soon convinced of the true reason. The intention was to produce a cross of two breeds by this close interbreeding, but the attempt failed from the start by the great mistake made. A breeder, it is alleged by a well known common saying, works with edged tools and may very easily cut his fingers, which is strictly true.

Large Herds Scarce.

The Denver Stockman predicts that in a few years there will not be a herd of cattle in the country outside of Texas numbering more than 5,000 head. Probably this is a safe prediction, says The National Stockman. There are only a few of the big companies left in the west. The tendency is toward smaller herds, better care and better cattle throughout the range country. The small cattleman prevails because he is best adapted to the country and to the business in these days of limited pastures, winter hay feeding and improved blood on the range.

THE LAST OF EARTH

IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL OF FORMER PRESIDENT HARRISON.

Gone Down to That Low, Green Tent Whose Curtain Never Outward Swings—Fifteen Thousand of His Fellow Citizens Testify to Their Respect for the Dead—President McKinley and Other Distinguished Men Pay Their Tribute of Respect to the Honored Dead.

Indianapolis, March 19.—In the center of a hollow square composed of fully 15,000 of his fellow citizens, the remains of Benjamin Harrison were yesterday afternoon interred in the family lot in Crown Hill cemetery. Close by the grave were the members of the family, President McKinley and other visitors of distinction and the more intimate friends of Gen. Harrison.

Back, a distance of fifty yards, behind ropes guarded zealously by a large force of police, stood with uncovered heads the great multitude who knew him not so well as did they who stood beside the freshly upturned earth, but who honored him and admired him fully as much. It is doubtful if any public man, at least in this generation, was borne to his last resting place among so many manifestations of respect. Of passionate grief there was little beyond the members of his family, but the tribute of respect was universal. It came from all alike, from those of his own political faith and from those who differed with him concerning what is best for the nation's good, from men who had been his life-long friends, and from those who knew him merely by sight and to whom he never spoke. It came from women and children, from white and black, from all conditions and kinds of people. There was no exception anywhere to the expression that the nation had lost one of its ablest men, and the greatest man of his generation in his own state.

By the grave stood the chief magistrate of the nation and behind the ropes were all the street arabs of Gen. Harrison's city—every grade of human life in America between the two was represented in the crowd—and in them was but one feeling—that a man had fled who was honest at all times with himself and others and whose ability and character were such as the nation could ill afford to lose. The weather was unsurpassable; bright sunlight—the warm breath of spring in every breeze, and yet in the air, a touch of winter that brought the blood to the cheek and a sparkle to the eye.

The services at the church and grave were simple in the extreme, all of the most excellent taste, and, like the proceedings Saturday, there was an utter absence of friction in everything that was done. All was well-ordered and well performed.

MRS. NATION WILL SMASH.

Promises Leavenworth and Atchison a Sample of Her Work.

Topeka, Kan., March 19.—Mrs. Nation is growing impatient, and will start out on a smashing tour the coming week. She will first use her hatchet on Atchison and Leavenworth joints.

"I shall slip over to Atchison some night when they are not expecting me," she said to-day, "and smash a couple of joints before the police know I am there. After the excitement cools down I shall take a little run to Leavenworth. The saloonkeepers of Atchison and Leavenworth have threatened to do me bodily harm, but my experience is that a Kansas jointist is always a coward, and would gnaw out of a room at sight of me if he couldn't get out any other way. So I don't expect much trouble when I go to Atchison and Leavenworth."

Mrs. Nation says she will shortly start on a tour of the state.

BONI THE VICTOR.

Paris, March 19.—In the duel between Boni de Castellane and M. de Rodays, the latter was wounded in the thigh. La Liberte says M. de Rodays was hit in the right thigh at the first exchange of shots. Count de Castellane was not injured. The duel was then stopped. The meeting occurred in the Parc des Princes, where many cycling events occurred last summer. The Count de Dionne directed the duel. M. de Rodays's wound was in the lower fleshy part of the thigh, bled abundantly, but he is not seriously injured.

STILL HOPE FOR PEACE.

Prospects Are Considered Bright in South Africa.

Pretoria, March 19. — The prospects of peace are still considered hopeful. The Boer losses last month were 160 killed, 400 wounded and 1,000 captured and surrendered. Owing to the heavy rains Gen. French's transport difficulties are still enormous.

For Murder of His Daughter.

New York, March 19.—Charles Friedmann, twenty-three years of age, was arrested in Brooklyn last night for the murder of his daughter Jessie, sixteen months of age, and the probable fatal wounding of another daughter three years of age. It is claimed that while temporarily insane he seized a clock and struck Jessie on the head. Then picking up the clock he hurled it at the other child.

FATAL FIRE AT PITTSBURG.

One Man Killed and Three Others Seriously Injured.

Pittsburg, March 19. — During the progress of a fire in this city one man lost his life, three others were fatally hurt and the property loss will be fully $250,000, well insured. All of the injured are in the hospital in rather bad shape, but will recover. The fire broke out in the boiler room of the French company's hair felt factory, just opposite the exposition main building. Through some confusion no alarm was turned in for some time and it was fully twenty minutes after the fire was discovered before the engines reached the scene. From the felt factory the flames leaped across the street and in a short time the exposition building was burning fiercely. All the firemen could do here was to prevent the flames from spreading. After hard work this was accomplished and machinery hall, with its valuable contents was saved. The main building was a complete wreck. Two lumber yards adjoining the felt factory soon succumbed. Gallagher & Banker lost 1,000,000 feet of lumber and Henry Henk 250,000 feet of valuable hardwood.

TRIAS' SURRENDER.

It Indicates the Final Stage of Armed Resistance.

Washington, March 19.—The war department has received the following cablegram from Gen. MacArthur at Manila, announcing the surrender of Lieut. Gen. Trias:

"Mariano Trias, only lieutenant general insurgent army, surrendered March 15, San Francisco de Malabon, with nine officers and 199 well armed men. Trias immediately took oath of allegiance, presence several natives. Most auspicious event; indicates final stage armed insurrection. Prestige Trias, Southern Luzon, equal to Aguinaldo. Gen. Bates and Col. Frank D. Baldwin entitled great credit for persistent work bringing this about."

Gen. MacArthur will remain in command of the Philippines until the civil government is established.

KING EDWARD'S OATH.

Catholics Will Ask That the Wording Be Changed.

London, March 19. — The king will give an audience next Thursday to Lord Herries, a Roman Catholic peer, who will move an inquiry in the house of lords into the wording of the accession oath as to whether the king's Protestantism cannot be asserted sufficiently without hurting the feelings of his Catholic subjects. It is not only general belief, but it is considered that of the king's also, that the government has agreed to grant the request. The report of Lord Herries' reception, which is made public at the king's express wish, is taken as an indication of the king's feelings in regard to the inquiry.

GIRL STRIKERS WIN.

Silk Workers Secure and Advance in Wages.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., March 19.—The girl strikers at the Bramford Bros.' silk mills will return to work in the morning, as satisfactory settlements have been reached. They will get an advance in wages of from 5 to 20 per cent, according to the class of work. It is believed by the leaders of the strikers that this resumption of work will induce the managers of mills in Pittston, Scranton, Paterson, N. J., and the Hess-Goldsmith mill in this city to arrange some means of reaching a settlement and that the mills will not remain much longer idle. Committees from the central labor union in each of these towns are endeavoring to effect a settlement.

DISGRACE TOO GREAT.

Grandfather of Emperor William's Assailant Commits Suicide.

Berlin, March 19.—The wound in Emperor William's face is healing in the most favorable manner. The edges have not yet united, but Dr. Bergmann hopes to unite them so that the scar will be merely a narrow line that will not disfigure his majesty. The emperor works vigorously, as usual. The outrage has had a distressing sequel at Schneidmuhl, where Heinrich Weiland, eighty-one years old, grandfather of the emperor's assailant, shot himself. He had declared that he could not survive the disgrace of his grandson's act.

Before he could help his wife, who was sick in bed, and five children, they were burned to death.

BECOMING SERIOUS

MANCHURIAN AFFAIR CAUSES BREAK IN NEGOTIATIONS.

As a Result the Ministers of the Other Powers Hold No Meetings With the Chinese—Prince Ching Anxious to Learn What the Powers Will Demand — British and Russians Reduce Their Guards to Prevent Possibility of a Collision—Death of Li Hung Chang Momentarily Expected.

Pekin, March 19.—Prince Ching, one of the Chinese peace commissioners, recently visited the British minister and pressed for the presentation of further specifications regarding the treaties to be concluded between China and the Western nations. He disclosed considerable anxiety to learn just what the powers would demand. No action on the matter was taken by the ministers at the recent meetings, and, as a result, the Chinese plenipotentiaries reaffirmed their desire to conclude the negotiations. The British minister has informed them that the Manchuria affair had disturbed relations, and as the Chinese had reached no result in that matter the ministers were unable to immediately meet the Chinese representatives for further consultation.

The imperial court is sending secret instructions to the officials to adjust as quickly as possible all affairs with the foreigners, especially those arising from the Boxer troubles. It has also requested the names of efficient public men all over the empire, the intention being to select those who are judged capable of carrying out reforms. On the other hand, however, the court is promoting many officials who were deeply implicated in the murder of foreigners, some of whom are named in the lists of guilty provincial officials.

To Prevent a Clash.

Tien-tsin, March 19. — There is no change in the situation developed by the Anglo-Russian railroad siding dispute. The British and Russian forces are still represented by small detachments with officers encamped on opposite sides of the railway siding. The utmost friendliness is exhibited toward each other by the opposing parties, but as a measure of precaution the guards have been reduced to twenty-seven on each side in order to prevent any possible collision during the negotiations. A Russian general arrived from Pekin last evening.

Li Hung Chang's Death Expected.

Pekin, March 19.—The health of Li Hung Chang is again a matter of grave concern to the ministers of the powers. Mr. Rockhill, the American special commissioner, who visited Li yesterday, says he is a physical wreck and apparently in a state of utter collapse, although mentally as brilliant as ever. Mr. Rockhill would not be surprised to hear of his death at any moment. The removal of Li Hung Chang by death or any other cause would be unfortunate at the present moment.

Russia Checked.

London, March 19.—A dispatch to the Times from Pekin, dated Sunday, says that Chinese officials state that they are informed from St. Petersburg that Russia abandons her claims to exclusive rights in Mongolia and Turkestan, and consents to modify the stringency of her control over the civil administration of Manchuria. She agreed that the convention between herself and China shall be published as soon as it is signed at St. Petersburg, the signatures to be affixed within two weeks. This is the first check inflicted on Russian diplomacy in China since Lord Salisbury was cajoled into ordering the withdrawal of the British ships from Port Arthur during the crisis in 1898. It cannot fail to profoundly modify the situation by convincing the Chinese that there still exist international combinations capable of maintaining equilibrium in the far East.

ON THEIR TOUR OF THE WORLD.

Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York Sail.

Portsmouth, March 19.—All the warships here were dressed Saturday in honor of the departure of the duke and duchess of Cornwall and York for a tour of the world on the royal yacht Ophir. At noon King Edward presented the Victorian Order to the blue jackets who hauled the gun carriage at Windsor on the occasion of Queen Victoria's funeral, when the artillery horses balked. Before leaving here the jewelry of the duchess of York was insured for all risks in the sum of £75,000. The duke's jewelry was insured for £2,000. The Ophir sailed at 4:05 on her long journey. The Victoria and Albert, with the king and queen aboard, preceded her out of the harbor. There was a picturesque and enthusiastic scene as the Ophir sailed. The naval vessels were posted along the jetty, while roadways were crowded for miles with cheering crowds. The duke and duchess of Cornwall and York stood on the hurricane deck of the Ophir in full view of the cheering crowds and acknowledged the demonstrations of the people. The royal yacht Victoria and Albert accompanied the Ophir to the Nab lighthouse.

KILLED BY HER DOG.

Woman Meets Death in a Shocking Manner.

New York, March 19. — Mrs. Carrie Cobus, living on West Eighteenth street, met death in a shocking manner last night, being killed by her dog. Mrs. Cobus, her husband, her son and her mother live together. Mrs. Cobus was thirty-eight years of age and subject to epileptic fits. Her dog was a fox terrier of unusual intelligence. Mrs. Elizabeth Broadhead, Mrs. Cobus' mother, said her daughter went out into the kitchen about 7 o'clock. A few moments later Mrs. Broadhead heard the dog barking excitedly. The mother ran out and found her daughter lying on the floor. She knew it was an epileptic attack, and, dashing a pitcher of water into her daughter's face she ran into the hall and screamed for help. Philip Rockefeller, living near by, heard her and ran to her assistance. They ran into the room where Mrs. Cobus lay and there saw a horrifying spectacle. The pet terrier, seeing his mistress in agony, appeared to have gone mad. He flew at the prostrate woman as she writhed on the floor and repeatedly attacked her, burying his teeth in her throat and severing her jugular vein. When Rockefeller tried to tear the maddened brute away it clung to the dying woman with terrible tenacity. He finally got the animal loose. It then attacked the mother and the man, but they beat it off. A physician was summoned, but Mrs. Cobus bled to death. The dog disappeared in the street.

HILL LEASES THE BURLINGTON.

Railway System Practically in Control of Great Northern and Northern Pacific.

Chicago, March 19.—The Burlington road has passed practically into the hands of J. J. Hill. This information comes from an authoritative source. Arrangements are about completed whereby the Burlington system is to be leased to the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroad companies, the latter guaranteeing 7 per cent dividends on all the Burlington stock. The Morgan and Harriman interests obtained control of the Burlington road several weeks ago, and it is with them that Mr. Hill has been negotiating for the lease.

The rapid advance in Burlington stock during the last two weeks, and the additional jump of six points Saturday, made it certain that something of an extraordinary nature was in the wind. Few people, however, had any idea that Mr. Hill was trying to get control of the property, and special stress was laid upon the assertion that neither Mr. Hill nor any of his brokers was buying Burlington stock. Mr. Hill has been in New York for more than a week in connection with this deal, but so secret were the negotiations conducted that the announcement of his acquiring control comes as a surprise.

LIVES LOST AT SEA

SERIOUS ACCIDENT OCCURS ON THE NEW YORK.

Explosion of an Ammonia Tank Overcomes Fifteen People and Two of Them Were So Seriously Prostrated That They Died—Both Victims Buried at Sea—Cause of the Explosion Is Not Known—Shaft Breaks, Causing Considerable Delay and Much Damage.

New York, March 19. — The steamship New York reached her dock at 10 o'clock last night after a passage in which an explosion of an ammonia tank and a broken shaft caused loss of life and much damage to the vessel. As a result of the explosion fifteen men were overcome by the fumes of ammonia on Thursday last and so seriously prostrated that two deaths occurred. Both victims were buried at sea. Several others were confined to the ship's hospital for some time and one was still in the hospital when the ship was docked. The dead are:

John Kent, a steward, who died of pneumonia thirty-six hours after the accident, the disease being due to inflammation of the respiratory organs, caused by the ammonia. Carl Engkvist, an American citizen, a steerage passenger whose address was unobtainable.

F. Colston, a cabin steward, is still suffering inflammation of the lungs.

According to a statement made by Supt. James A. Wright of the American line, after he had gone on board and talked with the officers, the explosion or escape of ammonia as it was termed by Mr. Wright, occurred at 5:30 o'clock. The bonnet of the condenser on the refrigerating apparatus was forced in some manner. The apparatus is in the after portion of the main deck on the starboard side. Mr. Wright said he had been unable to ascertain the exact cause of the escape of ammonia.

Near the refrigerating apparatus at the time were eleven stewards of the steerage and cabin and fifteen steerage passengers, and when the ammonia fumes burst out into the compartment, onto the lower deck and into the saloon, there was a rush to escape. Some were overcome by the fumes and dropped to the floor. Others were able to get out of the room and efforts were made to open the portholes in the compartment and let the ammonia escape. Some time elapsed, however, before this could be done. Those who had escaped, after getting a breath of pure air, rushed back to rescue those who had been unable to escape. All were more or less prostrated by the fumes, but only a few had to go to the hospital, and they are all doing well.

The breaking of the shaft occurred at 11:45 o'clock Friday morning. The vessel was sailing in a smooth sea at the time. The shaft broke near the propeller on the port side of the ship. It did not drop out and a boat was lowered and the propeller lashed fast to the side with a wire. Supt. Wright said he did not think it would be necessary to put the ship into dry dock to repair her, but was sure the damage could be quickly remedied.

TOURISTS LOSE THEIR CLOTHES.

Fire Destroys Two Pullman Sleeping Cars.

Palatka, Fla., March 19.—The Pullman sleeping cars Tabila and Elmer, on a Plant System train from Tampa to Jacksonville, were completely burned early yesterday morning at Buffalo, seven miles from this city. The sleepers were filled with tourists and so rapidly did the flames spread that there was no time for saving clothes or valuables. At the time of the discovery of the flames they had gained such headway that it was impossible to extinguish them, and the train was run to Buffalo Bluff, where the burning cars were shoved into a siding. The seventeen passengers, including several women, were hurried into the other sleepers and made as comfortable as possible. Several lost their clothing and personal effects. The loss in money and jewelry, according to the statement of the passengers, is between $10,000 and $15,000. The total loss is estimated at $60,000.

MUTTON MAKING.

Increase in the Demand For Superior Sheep Meat.

The development of the sheep feeding industry has been the subject of frequent comment, says The Breeder's Gazette, and it has been repeatedly pointed out that it is due to the introduction of the blood of the distinctly mutton breeds. Feeders were not long in learning that the crosses of this blood would not only give them a sheep that would feed better and take on more weight for the amount of provender consumed, but would also produce a sheep that would sell for a better price on the market. Butchers gradually came to be able to give their customers a taste of the "real article," and few palates there are that do not quickly acquire a liking for well bred, well fed and well cooked mutton. In consequence of this improvement in the quality of the lamb chop and leg of mutton consumers have increased their purchases until mutton has come to form a very prominent feature on the American bill of fare. There is no more wholesome, nourishing and satisfying meat-food, and as people will eat meat in ever increasing quantities the men who make the mutton have every prospect of a strong and expanding market.

In the past quarter the receipts have been tremendous, as was clearly indicated by the number of sheep that were put on feed, but so great has been the demand that the market has cleaned up these enormous receipts in very good fashion. Large numbers have gone back to the country for the feed lots, but the slaughter houses have absorbed arrivals of fat sheep to a degree almost record breaking. With the combined demand from killers and feeders it has resulted that the market the present year has experienced fewer gluts than ever before, a fact that tells the story in the fewest possible words. It is, of course, possible that this industry may be overdone. Indeed many were of the opinion that the thousands of sheep sent to feed last fall would prove the undoing of the industry, but the market rises to meet the conditions of increased production, and with the present earning capacity of our people there is no reason to doubt a continued enlargement of the demand for legs, saddles and chops. At the same time it behooves breeders to continue their work of improvement by the selection of the best obtainable rams and for feeders to study with the greatest care the problem of the selection of foods best adapted to put on weight with the greatest economy. The demands of the market place are ever more exacting. Better quality of product is constantly required. Tastes grow more fastidious with education and must be catered to. Producers cannot rest content on past achievements. The effort must always be for better quality produced at less cost.

Danger of Interbreeding.

The moral law laid down by the ancient moralists made it a crime to breed an animal to its progeny, says The Sheep Breeder. It even forbade to use the ewe's milk to cook a lamb or a kid in. We cannot help but think that the end and intention of every one of these cattle throughout the range country. The small cattleman prevails because he is best adapted to the country and to the business in these days of limited pastures, winter hay feeding and improved blood on the range.

THE LAST OF EARTH

IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL OF FORMER PRESIDENT HARRISON.

Gone Down to That Low, Green Tent Whose Curtain Never Outward Swings—Fifteen Thousand of His Fellow Citizens Testify to Their Respect for the Dead—President McKinley and Other Distinguished Men Pay Their Tribute of Respect to the Honored Dead.

Indianapolis, March 19.—In the center of a hollow square composed of fully 15,000 of his fellow citizens, the remains of Benjamin Harrison were yesterday afternoon interred in the family lot in Crown Hill cemetery. Close by the grave were the members of the family, President McKinley and other visitors of distinction and the more intimate friends of Gen. Harrison.

Back, a distance of fifty yards, behind ropes guarded zealously by a large force of police, stood with uncovered heads the great multitude who knew him not so well as did they who stood beside the freshly upturned earth, but who honored him and admired him fully as much. It is doubtful if any public man, at least in this generation, was borne to his last resting place among so many manifestations of respect. Of passionate grief there was little beyond the members of his family, but the tribute of respect was universal. It came from all alike, from those of his own political faith and from those who differed with him concerning what is best for the nation's good, from men who had been his life-long friends, and from those who knew him merely by sight and to whom he never spoke. It came from women and children, from white and black, from all conditions and kinds of people. There was no exception anywhere to the expression that the nation had lost one of its ablest men, and the greatest man of his generation in his own state.

By the grave stood the chief magistrate of the nation and behind the ropes were all the street arabs of Gen. Harrison's city—every grade of human life in America between the two was represented in the crowd—and in them was but one feeling—that a man had died who was honest at all times with himself and others and whose ability and character were such as the nation could ill afford to lose. The weather was unsurpassable, bright sunlight—the warm breath of spring in every breeze, and yet in the air, a touch of winter that brought the blood to the cheek and a sparkle to the eye.

The services at the church and grave were simple in the extreme, all of the most excellent taste, and, like the proceedings Saturday, there was an utter absence of friction in everything that was done. All was well-ordered and well performed.

MRS. NATION WILL SMASH.

Topeka, Kan., March 19.—Mrs. Nation is growing impatient, and will start out on a smashing tour the coming week. She will first use her hatchet on Atchison and Leavenworth joints.

"I shall slip over to Atchison some night when they are not expecting me," she said to-day, "and smash a couple of joints before the police know I am there. After the excitement cools down I shall take a little run to Leavenworth. The saloonkeepers of Atchison and Leavenworth have threatened to do me bodily harm, but my experience is that a Kansas jointist is always a coward, and would gnaw out of a room at sight of me if he couldn't get out any other way. So I don't expect much trouble when I go to Atchison and Leavenworth."

Mrs. Nation says she will shortly start on a tour of the state.

BONI THE VICTOR.

Paris, March 19.—In the duel between Boni de Castellane and M. de Rodays, the latter was wounded in the thigh. La Liberte says M. de Rodays was hit in the right thigh at the first exchange of shots. Count de Castellane was not injured. The duel was then stopped. The meeting occurred in the Parc des Princes, where many cycling events occurred last summer. The Count de Dionne directed the duel. M. de Roday's wound was in the lower fleshy part of the thigh, bled abundantly, but he is not seriously injured.

STILL HOPE FOR PEACE.

Prospects Are Considered Bright in South Africa.

Pretoria, March 19. — The prospects of peace are still considered hopeful. The Boer losses last month were 160 killed, 400 wounded and 1,000 captured and surrendered. Owing to the heavy rains Gen. French's transport difficulties are still enormous.

-o-

For Murder of His Daughter.

New York, March 19.—Charles Friedmann, twenty-three years of age, was arrested in Brooklyn last night for the murder of his daughter Jessie, sixteen months of age, and the probable fatal wounding of another daughter three years of age. It is claimed that while temporarily insane he seized a clock and struck Jessie on the head. Then picking up the clock he hurled it at the other child.

FATAL FIRE AT PITTSBURG.

One Man Killed and Three Others Seriously Injured.

Pittsburg, March 19. — During the progress of a fire in this city one man lost his life, three others were fatally hurt and the property loss will be fully $250,000, well insured. All of the injured are in the hospital in rather bad shape, but will recover. The fire broke out in the boiler room of the French company's hair felt factory, just opposite the exposition main building. Through some confusion no alarm was turned in for some time and it was fully twenty minutes after the fire was discovered before the engines reached the scene. From the felt factory the flames leaped across the street and in a short time the exposition building was burning fiercely. All the firemen could do here was to prevent the flames from spreading. After hard work this was accomplished and machinery hall, with its valuable contents was saved. The main building was a complete wreck. Two lumber yards adjoining the felt factory soon succumbed. Gallagher & Banker lost 1,000,000 feet of lumber and Henry Henk 250,000 feet of valuable hardwood.

TRIAS' SURRENDER.

It Indicates the Final Stage of Armed Resistance.

Washington, March 19.—The war department has received the following cablegram from Gen. MacArthur at Manila, announcing the surrender of Lieut. Gen. Trias:

"Mariano Trias, only lieutenant general insurgent army, surrendered March 15, San Francisco de Malabon, with nine officers and 199 well armed men. Trias immediately took oath of allegiance, presence several natives. Most auspicious event; indicates final stage armed insurrection. Prestige Trias, Southern Luzon, equal to Aguinaldo. Gen. Bates and Col. Frank D. Baldwin entitled great credit for persistent work bringing this about."

Gen. MacArthur will remain in command of the Philippines until the civil government is established.

KING EDWARD'S OATH.

Catholics Will Ask That the Wording Be Changed.

London, March 19. — The king will give an audience next Thursday to Lord Herries, a Roman Catholic peer, who will move an inquiry in the house of lords into the wording of the accession oath as to whether the king's Protestantism cannot be asserted sufficiently without hurting the feelings of his Catholic subjects. It is not only general belief, but it is considered that of the king's also that the government has agreed to grant the request. The report of Lord Herries' reception, which is made public at the king's express wish, is taken as an indication of the king's feelings in regard to the inquiry.

GIRL STRIKERS WIN.

Silk Workers Secure and Advance in Wages.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., March 19.—The girl strikers at the Bramford Bros.' silk mills will return to work in the morning, as satisfactory settlements have been reached. They will get an advance in wages of from 5 to 20 per cent, according to the class of work. It is believed by the leaders of the strikers that this resumption of work will induce the managers of mills in Pittston, Scranton, Paterson, N. J., and the Hess-Goldsmith mill in this city to arrange some means of reaching a settlement and that the mills will not remain idle much longer. Committees from the central labor union in each of these towns are endeavoring to effect a settlement.

DISGRACE TOO GREAT.

Grandfather of Emperor William's Assailant Commits Suicide.

Berlin, March 19.—The wound in Emperor William's face is healing in the most favorable manner. The edges have not yet united, but Dr. Bergmann hopes to unite them so that the scar will be merely a narrow line that will not disfigure his majesty. The emperor works vigorously, as usual. The outrage has had a distressing sequel at Schneidmuhl, where Heinrich Weiland, eighty-one years old, grandfather of the emperor's assailant, shot himself. He had declared that he could not survive the disgrace of his grandson's act.

SIX LIVES LOST

As the Result of the Explosion of an Oil Stove.

Cape Elltown, N. B., March 19.—Six persons were burned to death at Little Cascapade, Que., as the result of the explosion of a coal oil stove in the house of Joseph Gauthier. The stove exploded on the landing of the stairs. Mr. Gauthier finding it impossible to remove the stove on account of the burning oil, jumped from an upperstory window and broke a leg. Before he could help his wife, who was sick in bed, and five children, they were burned to death.

Chicago, March 19.—The jury in the insurance conspiracy case of Dr. Michael N. Regent, Nora O'Brien and her son James O'Brien, returned a verdict of guilty. Regent will be sentenced to the penitentiary in addition to paying a fine. The O'Briens escape with a fine. The trio was charged with substituting false bodies for members of the Knights of Ladies of Security and collecting the insurance.

Blue Earth, Minn., March 19. — The Omaha is moving its railway shops from Elmore to Mankato. Several families have already moved from the former to the latter place. The roundhouse of the company will be removed to this place.

BECOMING SERIOUS

MANCHURIAN AFFAIR CAUSES BREAK IN NEGOTIATIONS.

As a Result the Ministers of the Other Powers Hold No Meetings With the Chinese—Prince Ching Anxious to Learn What the Powers Will Demand — British and Russians Reduce Their Guard to Prevent Possibility of a Collision—Death of Li Hung Chang Momentarily Expected.

Pekin, March 19.—Prince Ching, one of the Chinese peace commissioners, recently visited the British minister and pressed for the presentation of further specifications regarding the treaties to be concluded between China and the Western nations. He disclosed considerable anxiety to learn just what the powers would demand. No action on the matter was taken by the ministers at the recent meetings, and as a result the Chinese plenipotentiaries reaffirmed their desire to conclude the negotiations. The British minister has informed them that the Manchuria affair had disturbed the relations, and as the Chinese had reached no result in that matter the ministers were unable to immediately meet the Chinese representatives for further consultation.

The imperial court is sending secret instructions to the officials to adjust as quickly as possible all affairs with the foreigners, especially those arising from the Boxer troubles. It has also requested the names of efficient public men all over the empire, the intention being to select those who are judged capable of carrying out reforms. On the other hand, however, the court is promoting many officials who were deeply implicated in the murder of foreigners, some of whom are named in the lists of guilty provincial officials.

To Prevent a Clash.

Tien-tsin, March 19. — There is no change in the situation developed by the Anglo-Russian railroad siding dispute. The British and Russian forces are still represented by small detachments with officers encamped on opposite sides of the railway siding. The utmost friendliness is exhibited toward each other by the opposing parties, but as a measure of precaution the guards have been reduced to twenty-seven on each side in order to prevent any possible collision during the negotiations. A Russian general arrived from Pekin last evening.

Li Hung Chang's Death Expected.

Pekin, March 19.—The health of Li Hung Chang is again a matter of grave concern to the ministers of the powers. Mr. Rockhill, the American special commissioner, who visited Li yesterday, says he is a physical wreck and apparently in a state of utter collapse, although mentally as brilliant as ever. Mr. Rockhill would not be surprised to hear of his death at any moment. The removal of Li Hung Chang by death or any other cause would be unfortunate at the present moment.

Russia Checked.

London, March 19.—A dispatch to the Times from Pekin, dated Sunday, says that Chinese officials state that they are informed from St. Petersburg that Russia abandons her claims to exclusive rights in Mongolia and Turkestan, and consents to modify the stringency of her control over the civil administration of Manchuria. She agreed that the convention between herself and China shall be published as soon as it is signed at St. Petersburg, the signatures to be affixed within two weeks. This is the first check inflicted on Russian diplomacy in China since Lord Salisbury was cajoled into ordering the withdrawal of the British ships from Port Arthur during the crisis in 1898. It cannot fail to profoundly modify the situation by convincing the Chinese that there still exist international combinations capable of maintaining equilibrium in the far East.

ON THEIR TOUR OF THE WORLD.

Portsmouth, March 19.—All the warships here were dressed Saturday in honor of the departure of the duke and duchess of Cornwall and York for a tour of the world on the royal yacht Ophir. At noon King Edward presented the Victorian Order to the blue jackets who hauled the gun carriage at Windsor on the occasion of Queen Victoria's funeral, when the artillery horses balked. Before leaving here the jewelry of the duchess of York was insured for all risks in the sum of £75,000. The duke's jewelry was insured for £2,000. The Ophir sailed at 4:05 on her long journey. The Victoria and Albert, with the king and queen aboard, preceded her out of the harbor. There was a picturesque and enthusiastic scene as the Ophir sailed. The naval vessels were posted along the jetty, while roadways were crowded for miles with cheering crowds. The duke and duchess of Cornwall and York stood on the hurricane deck of the Ophir in full view of the cheering crowds and acknowledged the demonstrations of the people. The royal yacht Victoria and Albert accompanied the Ophir to the Nab lighthouse.

TOLSTOI VERY ILL.

Celebrated Novelist Loses Consciousness Several Times Daily.

Paris, March 19. — Letters received here from Moscow represent Count Tolstoi's condition as desperate. The novelist loses consciousness several times daily.

KILLED BY HER DOG.

Woman Meets Death in a Shocking Manner.

New York, March 19. — Mrs. Carrie Cobus, living on West Eighteenth street, met death in a shocking manner last night, being killed by her dog. Mrs. Cobus, her husband, her son and her mother live together. Mrs. Cobus was thirty-eight years of age and subject to epileptic fits. He dog was a fox terrier of unusual intelligence. Mrs. Elizabeth Broadhead, Mrs. Cobus' mother, said her daughter went out into the kitchen about 7 o'clock. A few moments later Mrs. Broadhead heard the dog barking excitedly. The mother ran out and found her daughter lying on the floor. She knew it was an epileptic attack, and, dashing a pitcher of water into her daughter's face she ran into the hall and screamed for help. Philip Rockefeller, living near by, heard her and ran to her assistance. They ran into the room where Mrs. Cobus lay and there saw a horrifying spectacle. The pet terrier, seeing his mistress in agony, appeared to have gone mad. He flew at the prostrate woman as she writhed on the floor and repeatedly attacked her, burying his teeth in her throat and severing her jugular vein. When Rockefeller tried to tear the maddened brute away it clung to the dying woman with terrible tenacity. He finally got the animal loose. It then attacked the mother and the man, but they beat it off. A physician was summoned, but Mrs. Cobus bled to death. The dog disappeared in the street.

HILL LEASES THE BURLINGTON.

Railway System Practically in Control of Great Northern and Northern Pacific.

Chicago, March 19.—The Burlington road has passed practically into the hands of J. J. Hill. This information comes from an authoritative source. Arrangements are about completed whereby the Burlington system is to be leased to the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroad companies, the latter guaranteeing 7 per cent dividends on all the Burlington stock. The Morgan and Harriman interests obtained control of the Burlington road several weeks ago, and it is with them that Mr. Hill has been negotiating for the lease.

The rapid advance in Burlington stock during the last two weeks, and the additional jump of six points Saturday, made it certain that something of an extraordinary nature was in the wind. Few people, however, had any idea that Mr. Hill was trying to get control of the property, and special stress was laid upon the assertion that neither Mr. Hill nor any of his brokers was buying Burlington stock. Mr. Hill has been in New York for more than a week in connection with this deal, but so secret were the negotiations conducted that the announcement of his acquiring control comes as a surprise.

LIVES LOST AT SEA

SERIOUS ACCIDENT OCCURS ON THE NEW YORK.

Explosion of an Ammonia Tank Overcomes Fifteen People and Two of Them Were So Seriously Prostrated That They Died—Both Victims Buried at Sea—Cause of the Explosion Is Not Known—Shaft Breaks, Causing Considerable Delay and Much Damage.

New York, March 19. — The steamship New York reached her dock at 10 o'clock last night after a passage in which an explosion of an ammonia tank and a broken shaft caused loss of life and much damage to the vessel. As a result of the explosion fifteen men were overcome by the fumes of ammonia on Thursday last and so seriously prostrated that two deaths occurred. Both victims were buried at sea. Several others were confined to the ship's hospital for some time and one was still in the hospital when the ship was docked. The dead are:

John Kent, a steward, who died of pneumonia thirty-six hours after the accident, the disease being due to inflammation of the respiratory organs, caused by the ammonia. Carl Engkvist, and American citizen, a steerage passenger whose address was unobtainable.

F. Colston, a cabin steward, is still suffering inflammation of the lungs.

According to a statement made by Supt. James A. Wright of the American line, after he had gone on board and talked with the officers, the explosion or escape of ammonia as it was termed by Mr. Wright, occurred at 1:30 o'clock. The bonnet of the condenser on the refrigerating apparatus was forced in some manner. The apparatus is in the after portion of the main deck on the starboard side. Mr. Wright said he had been unable to ascertain the exact cause of the escape of ammonia.

Near the refrigerating apparatus at the time were eleven stewards of the steerage and cabin and fifteen steerage passengers, and when the ammonia fumes burst out into the compartment, onto the lower deck and into the saloon, there was a rush to escape. Some were overcome by the fumes and dropped to the floor. Others were able to get out of the room and efforts were made to open the portholes in the compartment and let the ammonia escape. Some time elapsed, however before this could be done. Those who had escaped, after getting a breath of pure air, rushed back to rescue those who had been unable to escape. All were more or less prostrated by the fumes, but only a few had to go to the hospital, and they are all doing well.

The breaking of the shaft occurred at 11:45 o'clock Friday morning. The vessel was sailing in a smooth sea at the time. The shaft broke near the propeller on the port side of the ship. It did not drop out and a boat was lowered and the propeller lashed fast to the side with a wire. Supt. Wright said he did not think it would be necessary to put the ship into dry dock to repair her, but was sure the damage could be quickly remedied.

TOURISTS LOSE THEIR CLOTHES.

Fire Destroys Two Pullman Sleeping Cars.

Palatka, Fla., March 19.—The Pullman sleeping cars Tabita and Elmer, on a Plant System train from Tampa to Jacksonville, were completely burned early yesterday morning at Buffalo, seven miles from this city. The sleepers were filled with tourists and so rapidly did the flames spread that there was no time for saving clothes or valuables. At the time of the discovery of the flames they had gained such headway that it was impossible to extinguish them, and the train was run to Buffalo Bluff, where the burning cars were shoved into a siding. The seventeen passengers, including several women, were hurried into the other sleepers and made as comfortable as possible. Several lost their clothing and personal effects. The loss in money and jewelry, according to the statement of the passengers, is between $10,000 and $15,000. The total loss is estimated at $60,000.

President Dias of Mexico is to be the guest of the French nation during his visit to France, and will be escorted from Vera Cruz to Marseilles by a fleet of French war vessels.

The German government is granting a subsidy of $1,500,000 per annum to call companies, and, in conjunction with Dutch undertakings, cables are to be laid between Batavia, Saigon, Palembang, Makassar, Amborna, the Carolines and New Guinea.

In South Carolina there was hanged last week a negro convicted of assaulting a white woman. This is the first execution under the law making this offense a capital one. Now that the law is on the statute book, it is hoped that it will have a tendency to prevent lynching.

In the Georgia legislature a bill has been introduced to empower the State Commissioner of Agriculture to inspect proprietary medicines to see if they are wholesome or injurious. When the testers, or "tasters," are inspecting medicines of an alcoholic nature, it is likely that well-developed jags will result ere the inspectors will be qualified to report.

The great dam across the Nile at Assoua, which has just been completed, is designed to hold back the floods and provide for a system of regular irrigation. It is expected that some 600,000 acres of arid land will be made productive. The dam cost about $1,000,000 and has required two years for construction—a comparatively short time, when the magnitude of the work is considered.

A young woman teacher of St. Louis tried to discourage tardiness by kissing the first pupil to arrive at school in the morning. On the day the system went into effect two boys of 16, only two years younger than the teacher, arrived several hours before school opened, and every boy in the school was on hand an hour ahead of time. The two big boys each got a kiss, but the system was abandoned.

The new Austrian parliament contains no less than twenty-six parties, with membership ranging from two up to sixty-four. No party has a majority. In elections the Anti-Semites and the Clerical parties suffered heavily, many of their seats being captured by Socialists or Nationalists. The German members outnumber the Poles, or Czecks, by thirty. It is not believed that any government can long continue to hold office.

A woman reformer recently pulled from the folds of her gown a soiled American flag and waved it before the audience, saying that she had waved it from public platforms in every country in Europe. "More's the pity!" murmured a much-loved general, who had lost his arm in fighting under that emblem. Those who see in our flag liberty and justice and moderation do not incessantly wave it above their heads; but perhaps they will sustain it long after those who every day wrap themselves ostentatiously in its folds have dropped to the rear.

According to the statements of a former resident in the Klondike, the inhabitants of that region suffer much from snow blindness. Dark glasses seem to be of no value in the way of prophylaxis. That which afforded the most protection was wooden goggles, the patterns for which were taken from those worn by the Indians. These were whittled out of a piece of wood, fitting closely around the eyes, and with no glasses at all; but in the place of glasses were very small openings to see through, the inside being colored black. A projection like the visor of a cap extended over them, which was also colored black on the under side to shade the eyes.

The groups of coast-defenders on duty at life-saving stations are now having their most trying experiences. One of the force describes a sentinel four along the shore in a terrific gale with a blinding snow. He was unable to keep his feet, but crawled to the outer limit of his beat, and returned in the same manner. The cold and fatigue made the night-watching an exhausting test of endurance and courage. His warning light was happily not needed, and no vessel came within the danger line; but the devotion was ready and the duty faithfully fulfilled. In the homes of comfort and security, when darkness and tempest bring no fear to the householder, let not the men whose service often means peril and privation be forgotten. Sympathetic thought, and whatever is needed to make their lives exempt from unnecessary suffering, ought to be a glad offering to the brave and patient men whose record is an honor to themselves and to their country.

Fishermen will be interested in the announcement that 200,000,000 whitefish will be distributed in the Great Lakes from the Michigan hatcheries during the coming season. In addition to these, the same hatcheries will distribute in the larger streams of Michigan 7,000,000 brook trout, 3,000,000 lake trout, 7,000,000 black bass and 100,000,000 wall-eyed pike. The work of planting fish is as interesting and about as important as any in the line of preserving an industry which is paid for out of public funds.

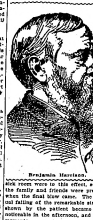
HARRISON IS DEAD

FORMER PRESIDENT MAKES GALLANT BUT LOSING FIGHT.

Gradual Sinking Until the End, Which Was Quiet and Peaceful—Relatives and Old Friends at the Bedside When He Passed Away—Death Causes Universal Sorrow Throughout the Country—Great Statesman Had Been Unconscious for Hours.

Indianapolis, March 15. — Gen. Harrison died at 4:45 o'clock yesterday afternoon without regaining consciousness. His death was quiet and painless, there being a gradual sinking until the end came which was marked by a single gasp for breath as life departed from the body of the great statesman. The relatives with a few exceptions and several of his old and tried friends were at the bedside when he passed away.

The general's condition was so bad in the morning after a restless night that the attending physicians understood that the end could not be far off, and all the bulletins sent out from the sick room were to this effect, so that the family and friends were prepared when the final blow came. The gradual failing of the remarkable strength shown by the patient became more noticeable in the afternoon, and a few moments



Benjamin Harrison.

Before the End

there was an apparent break-down on the part of the sufferer as he surrendered to the disease against which he had been so bravely battling for so many hours. The change was noticed by the physicians and the relatives, and friends who had retired from the sick room to the library below were quickly summoned and reached the bedside of the general before he passed away.

News of the death spread quickly through the city and several of the more intimate friends at once hurried to the residence to offer services, which, however, were not needed. The word was bulletined by all the newspapers and thus communicated to the people on their way home in the evening. The announcement produced the greatest sorrow, nearly every one having nurtured the hope that Gen. Harrison would recover.

Manifestations of Mourning.

Within a few minutes all the flags on the public buildings and most of the down-town blocks were hoisted at half-mast and other outward manifestations of mourning were made. None of Gen. Harrison's children were present at his death. Neither Col. Russell Harrison nor Mrs. McKee had reached the city, although both were hurrying on their way to the bedside of their dying parent as fast as steam would bear them. Elizabeth, the little daughter, had been taken from the sick room by the nurse before the end came. The group at the bedside included Mrs. Harrison, W. H. H. Miller, Samuel Miller, his son, the Rev. M. L. Haines, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, which Gen. Harrison had attended for so many years, S. M. Tibbitts, Dr. Jameson, Dr. Dorsey, Col. Dan Ransdell, sargeant-at-arms of the United States senate and a close personal friend of the dead ex-president, Clifton Artick and the nurses, who had been.

In Constant Attendance

at the bedside. Gen. Harrison's two sisters and an aunt were also present. Mrs. Harrison kneeled at the right-hand side of the bed, her husband's right hand clasped in her's, while Dr. Jameson held the left hand of the dying man, counting the feeble pulse beats. In a few moments after the friends had been summoned to the room the end came, Dr. Jameson announcing the sad fact. The great silence that fell on the sorrowful watchers at the bedside was broken by the voice of Dr. Haines raised in prayer, supplicating consolation for the bereaved wife and family, mingled with the sobs of the mourners. Steps were at once taken to notify the friends and relatives abroad.

Gen. Harrison had been unconscious for hours before his death, the exact time when he passed into a comatose state being hard to determine. He spoke to no one during the day and failed to recognize even his wife.

Will Lie in State.

The funeral of ex-President Harrison will take place next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The services will be held in the First Presbyterian church, of which he was a member for nearly fifty years. The Rev. M. L. Haines, pastor of the church, will have charge of the services. It was decided at a meeting of Gov. Durbin with a number of the other state officers that the body should lie in state in the rotunda of the capitol all day Saturday. The highest honors which it is in the power of the State of Indiana to pay will be rendered the remains of Gen. Harrison.

Will Issue a Proclamation.

Washington, March 15.—Deep interest was exhibited in all of the executive departments throughout the day in the reports that came as to the condition of ex-President Harrison. As office hours had closed for the day before the end came, the first official action regarding the death was deferred until to-day when, following precedents, President McKinley will issue his proclamation to the people notifying them of Gen. Harrison's death and setting out in becoming terms his virtues and characteristics. He also will order salutes to be fired at the various army posts the day of the funeral, and on ship board when the news is received. The secretary of war and the secretary of the navy will send out special notices to soldiers and sailors conveying the president's directions in this matter.

McKinley Will Attend.

Washington, March 15. — President McKinley will attend the funeral of Gen. Harrison. He will leave here probably this evening, although the exact time of departure has not been determined definitely, accompanied by Mrs. McKinley and Secretary Cortelyou. The party will stop at Canton for a day or more and Mrs. McKinley will remain there while the president and Mr. Cortelyou proceed to Indianapolis. The itinerary will be so arranged as to enable the president to leave Canton Saturday night for Indianapolis and return immediately after the funeral. After a brief stop at Canton he will return to Washington. It is not expected that any member of the cabinet will go.

BATTLE WITH BURGLARS.

Four Hundred Men Shoot at Three Burglars—Latter Wounded.

Farmington, Mich., March 15.—Four hundred men and boys had a pitched battle yesterday afternoon in which over a thousand shots were exchanged with three burglars who were hiding in a patch of woods three miles west of the village. After a desperate resistence the men showed a white flag from behind their cover, and when the posse swarmed in upon them it was found that all three were badly wounded. They gave their names as George Smith, John Taylor and Jim Williamson, and their residence as Port Huron. Williamson had been shot through the back, head and one elbow; Smith was wounded in the back and legs and Taylor in the face and legs. The trio were handcuffed and brought to the village, where their wounds were dressed. A large crowd made such threatening gestures after the men's capture that the officers removed their prisoners to the jail at Pontiac.

Reform at Deadwood.

Deadwood, S. D., March 15. — The mayor of Deadwood has issued orders for all saloons to exclude minors, and the order has so far been complied with. This included all newsboys, popcorn boys and messengers. The reform movement which was started in this city and Lead a few weeks ago is assuming large dimensions. The next thing that will be asked of the saloons is to abolish music and gambling.

Killed His Brother.

Fergus Falls, Minn., March 15. — Word has just been received here of the accidental shooting of Theodore Peterson, a twelve-year-old boy, whose home is in the vicinity of Vining. The boy had been hunting rabbits in company with his older brother and the latter's gun was accidentally discharged, the bullet entering just below Theodore's heart, causing almost instant death.

Important Question Involved.

Pierre, S. D., March 15. — The supreme court granted an order to show cause in the case of the new members of the board of charities appointed under the law enacted at the last session, reorganizing the board, and the date of hearing was set for the 28th. This hearing will be of the most importance, as the whole question of the referendum will be opened up by it.

Magie of Duluth, was shot and desperately wounded by a prisoner named Joe Goldstein, also known as Black Baker, big mitt man and all-around hard character, yesterday afternoon. The man had just been convicted of grand larceny and was being taken from the court house back to the county jail. He made a break for liberty and a scuffle with the deputy ensued. The prisoner pulled a revolver and shot the deputy, wounding him severely in the head. Goldstein then took to his heels, pursued by the sheriff and two other deputies. A running fire was kep up between the escaping man and his pursuers, but he was finally captured and placed in a dungeon. No one seems to know where Goldstein got the revolver. STEAMER HELPLESS IN GALE.

Furious Northwestern Storm Prevailing on Lake Michigan.

Racine, Wis., March 17.—The steamer Indiana, of the Goodrich line, lost her rudder in a storm off North Point and was left at the mercy of the storm. Steamer F. & P. M. It was impossible to get her into port on account of the lines parting. While working to get a line the Atlanta and Indiana came together and both were damaged, but not badly. The Indiana was left at anchor south of the harbor, but dragged five miles south. The Atlanta and fish tug Bloucher are standing by and the big tug Myers of Milwaukee has arrived and efforts will be made to get the disabled craft to port. A terrific gale prevails from the northwest.

Butte, Mont., March 17.—The police officials have made public the details of an attempt to blackmail Charles W. Clark, son of Senator W. A. Clark, out of $5,000. Mr. Clark a few days ago received a letter directing him to send the money in small bills to "Wyoz," Butte postoffice. The blackmailer added significantly that he was a dead shot. The letter was turned over to the postoffice authorities. The general delivery window was watched for several days, and finally a small boy called for a package addressed to "Wyoz." He was arrested and questioned. He said a masked man had given him 25 cents to call for the package. He proved his innocent complicity. The blackmailer is still at large.

LONG TIME COMING.

Ex-Gov. Upham Will Receive Pay for Civil War Services.

Marshfield, Wis., March 17.—Ex-Gov. W. H. Upham has received notice from the paymasteer general at Washington that he is entitled to $72.41 for military services rendered, and that a check for that amount would follow. As Maj. Upham's last military service dates back nearly thirty-four years, he has no idea what particular service is alluded to, but hopes to have the matter explained in the government's own leisurely way.

Servy "Inspectors."

Grinnell, Iowa, March 17.—A gang of swindlers has been at work along the lines of free rural delivery in this part of Iowa and have succeeded in mulcting several unsuspecting people. They have been traveling about the county representing themselves as postoffice inspectors. Their scheme is to inspect the mail boxes and then to demand from the owners a rental of from $3 to $5. The postoffice department has sent out notices to postmasters in the rural delivery districts asking them to warn their patrons.

State Will Cancel the Debt.

Hudson, Wis., March 17.—Some of the delegation that went to Madison to intercede for the cyclone-stricken city of New Richmond have returned. They state that the committee will make a unanimous effort in favor of donating the indebtedness of $21,000 which New Richmond city owed the State of Wisconsin. There is great rejoicing up there in consequence, as it will be quite a relief in the taxation burden of New Richmond.

Wealth and Honors.

Oshkosh., Wis., March 17.—David J. Lloyd of Oshkosh, who recently sold half an acre of land that he considered worthless near Negaunee, Mich., for $35,000, has had more good fortune. He has virtually resided in Fessenden, N. D., where his business interests were located, for several years. Gov. Frank White therefore felt warranted in appointing him to the board of normal school regents of North Dakota.

Cadets Nominated.

WAR IS IMMINENT

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA MAY LOCK HORNS.

Dispute Over the Railway Siding Threatens to End in Bloodshed—Russians Are Entrenching in the Disputed Territory—The British Forces Are Also Making Warlike Preparations — Suggestions for Reforms Are Made by the Emperor.

London, March 17. — A dispatch from Tien-tsin says the dispute between the Russians and British over the railway siding is developing. The outposts of the British and Russians are in close proximity to each other. The British have been reinforced. Trouble is imminent unless the Russians retire. The Russians are intrenching in the disputed territory. A company of the Hongkong regiment, with fixed bayonets, is in front, while two companies of the Madras pioneers, under the command of Maj. Johnson, are held in reserve.

In the house of commons last evening Lord George Hamilton, secretary of state for India, referring to the trouble beteen the British and Russians at Tien-tsin over a railway siding, said he understood that the Russian military authorities claimed certain railways by virtue of a concession which is alleged to have been granted by China since the disturbances commenced in that country. Differences had arisen owing to the construction of a siding, but the local authorities were dealing with the matter.

CHINA WAKING UP.

Suggestions for Reform Are Made by Command of the Emperor.

Pekin, March 17.—According to the emperor's command the viceroys and governors have presented suggestions for reform. One of these emphasizes educational reforms and the adoption of the idea of Sir Robert Hart, director of the maritime customs, that literary examinations should continue, but all the candidates getting the first degree be compelled while waiting for offices to take a course in foreign branches, especially those treating of foreign relations, international law, political topics and official equipment.

EVACUATION OF CHINA.

Chaffee Ordered to Withdraw All but a Legation Guard.

Washington, March 17.—An order was sent to Gen. Chaffee yesterday for the evacuation of China by American troops, leaving only a legation guard of 150 men. The troops will be removed from China the last of April. It is said at the war department that this clears up the Chinese situation so far as the war department is concerned, as the protection of the legation can in no sense be taken as occupation of Chinese territory, and the guard cannot be used for any other purpose. The transports Sumner and Indiana will be sent to Taku to take the troops in China to Manila. These troops consist of the Ninth infantry, four troops of the Sixth cavalry and the light battery formerly commanded by Capt. Reilly. Two transports will bring away the 1,100 animals which have been used by the army in China. Gen. Chaffee has advised the department that the best place of embarkation is Taku, which no doubt will be clear of ice on the date fixed for departure.

MORE FILIPINOS GIVE UP.

Gen. Trios and His Staff Take the Oath of Allegiance.

Manila, March 17. — Gen. Trios and members of his staff surrendered to-day at Santa Cruz de Malabon and took the oath of allegiance to the United States. His troops are marching to San Francisco de Malabon, where they will form and surrender to Gen. Reeve, an aide of Gen. Bates. The negotiations for the surrender were brought to a successful conclusion by the intermediation of Jose Ner, a Federal leader, who materially aided the military authorities.

IN GRIGGS' PLACE.

Report That John G. Johnson Has Been Offered the Position.

Philadelphia, March 17.—A report is in circulation that John G. Johnson, a leading member of the Philadelphia bar, has been offered the portfolio of attorney general to President McKinley's cabinet. Mr. Johnson said: "If I had been offered such a position in President McKinley's cabinet I would not say so. I do not want my refusal to answer the question, however, to be construed as a denial that the position has been offered me. I refuse either to confirm or deny the report."

PATRIOTIC GIFT.

Half a Million Dollars to Complete the Victoria Infirmary.

New Castle, March 17.—Watson Armstrong, heir of the late Lord Armstrong, the well known gunmaker, will present $500,000 to the Victoria jubilee infirmary which has not been finished because of a lack of funds. He says that had his great uncle lived long enough to know of Queen Victoria's death he would have been the first to assist in building the hospital bearing her name.

INDIAN MARRIAGES.

Court Holds Them Binding in a Suit for Alienation of Affections.

Omaha, Neb., March 17.—A jury at Pender, Neb., has awarded Joseph Kemp, a full-blood Omaha Indian, a judgment for $3,000 against John Gilpin, another Indian of the same tribe, for the alienation of his wife's affections. This verdict establishes a new precedent in Indian marriages, holding as it does that marriages by the Indian custom, prior to federal revision, is legal and binding.

Blood in the Boat.

Grinnell, Iowa, March 17. — The Iowa river at Eddyville is being dragged for the body of Abraham Lafferty, a prominent citizen, who is supposed to have been murdered. His boat was found floating in the river, bottom side up, and with dark blood stains along the bottom.

Village Almost Wiped Out.

Montgomery, Ala., March 17. — The village of Comer, Barbour county, was almost wiped out by fire yesterday. Nine stores were destroyed. The loss is not known.

THE LEARNED ASTRONOMER.

I knew a learned astronomer
Who all things earthly spurned,
And wandered through this pleasant land
With countenance upturned.
From early youth his habits were
To hold aloof from men;
He thought this old world's happenings
But little worth his ken.

He saw no wonders in the trees
Or in the waving grass—
He never thought it worth his while
To woo a pretty lass.
And not a whit this good man cared
For potentate or pope;
To him the greatest man was he
Who made the telescope.

But sun and moon arose and set
Precisely when he said;
He knew whence each comet came
And where each comet fled;
And for his plan to wipe the spots
From off the glorious sun,
Among the brethren of his ilk
He much renown had won.

This good soul died and went on high,
But much to his concern
He found the knowledge gleaned while here
Left nothing more to learn.
With telescope, from o'er a cloud,
He now peers down to earth,
And finds out strange and wondrous things
About his place of birth.

Mrs. Comstock's Campaign.

BY D. A. CHAUNCEY.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

When Chester Comstock announced himself as a candidate for congress everybody said his wife was back of it. Comstock had never been suspected of political ambitions—or any other sort except to live up to his ideals of a cultured gentleman. He was born of a wealthy family, educated in the universities of two continents, and possessed tastes which permitted him to enjoy to the utmost the good things of the world. He had a positive aversion for business in any form and no desire whatever to increase the estate which he had inherited. He lived a life of luxury, was widely known and universally liked.

If he lacked in ambition his wife did not. After their marriage and the joining of their fortunes she had assumer a position of social leadership. As the years slipped by she became restless. Then came a winter at Washington and she had returned home filled with a longing to return there as the wife of a congressman or other official that would give her established standing. All the arts of a dominant nature had been brought into play to instill into her husband's mind the fire of political ambition. Finally out of sheer good nature he told her he would acquiesce to her desires if it could be managed so that he would not be annoyed with the details of politics.

"If it will add materially to your happiness for me to be a congressman or a Senator or President or what not," said he, "I am willing and I will try to attend to the duties that may fall to me in such manner as not to reflect discredit on my name. But positively I know nothing about politics. If you wish me to go into this sort of thing the figuring must come from your head."

She secured an alliance at once with Maurice Fox, the man reputed to be the sharpest politician in the county. Mrs. Comstock was perfectly frank with Fox, told him her ambition and that money was no object and that she wanted to secure his assistance. She was somewhat surprised to learn that Fox would not accept cash.

"All the money I would touch in a campaign would be the actual expenses. I am very much inclined to help you, however, for reasons of my own. I can see how your husband might be a very strong candidate. Together with other men I have been somewhat successful in politics in

"I think it can be arranged."

Bryon county and have had and have considerable influence in determining candidates and policies. What I want is more power—not money. I think I see evidences on the part of some of my former colleagues to curtail my influence. In which event I must protect myself. If your husband will give me control of his candidacy and the assurance that I shall handle the patronage of the district in case of his election, I will put him in congress. Of course, it will cost a great deal of money—more because all the boys know he has got it.

"I think it can be arranged," said Mrs. Comstock. "Mr. Comstock has no political ambition and I am certain that he would consider the placing of the offices as a source of annoyance and embarrassment." So it was arranged.

The other politicians at once detected Fox's game and made a fight to keep the county from electing a Comstock delegation. This complicated matters and Fox and Mrs. Comstock were in constant conference. Comstock was not much perturbed at first, as his wife and Fox decided all questions. But as the fight waxed warmer Comstock's exclusiveness began to tell against him and it became necessary to take the minor politicians to him, particularly as these men were being promised divers and sundry fat from the crib. As Jack Murphy expressed it:

"I'm from Missouri. Show me. I want to see the old man hisself and hear him make his spiel."

So Comstock's library was invaded by a noisy and ill-smelling crew which put feet on the tables and poisoned the atmosphere with black cigar smoke. Comstock grew rebellious. Then Mrs. Comstock gave two or three dinners that drew from him the only protest he had ever made to her since their marriage. The dinners were attended by a motley crowd whose presence and whose conversation was an offense.

"Madam, you must be mad."

"This will not do," he said, sternly. "We must not lose our self-respect to accomplish a result, however greatly we desire it. I never will sit down to dinner with that sort of a crowd again."

At last the caucusses were held and the result was not decisive. One ward sent an instructed delegation to the county convention, as did several of the country towns. It became a fight to get these uninstructed delegates. Meantime Fox had fixed up a deal with the controlling forces in two other counties to nominate Comstock if he went to the convention with his own county and able to deliver its votes.

A delegation of manufacturers called on Comstock and pointing out that they could deliver five of the uninstructed delegates, asked for a pledge that he would stand for a certain tariff schedule on wood. Again it required all Fox and Mrs. Comstock could do to get his consent to such an "arrangement."

"Must I go to congress as an automaton," he protested; "with my vote pledges on all subjects?"

Fox explained that the tariff schedule always was fixed in a party caucus and he could go on record in the caucus in some way that would not do violence to his convictions.

Then came the denouement. Fox announced two days before the convention that victory was won. "We have one vote more than the opposition and they can't touch our phalanx. It has cost a pile of money but it is our meat."

The next morning Comstock received a call from John Weldon, an old man who had been in his service for many years and in the service of his father before him. Some time before he had been retired on a pension.

"Mr. Comstock," said Weldon, with tears in his eyes. "Forgive me, sir, for disturbing you, but I can't let it happen without making one appeal to you. I make bold to do so, sir, because you have always been kind to me as your father was before you."

In astonishment Comstock asked the old man what it was all about and in broken accents Weldon told him that the day before Mrs. Comstock had come to his house and told him that Comstock was about to be defeated for the nomination. There was but one way to save the day. Tim Maloney, the saloonkeeper, was in love with pretty Mary Weldon, his granddaughter. He was an uninstructed delegate to the convention. He had been rejected by Mary and had figured out in his cunning head that the Weldons were absolutely dependant on the Comstock pension and a bride should be the price of his vote. Fox had been approached and had induced Mrs. Comstock to play this last desperate card without letting Comstock know of it.

"I would go to the poorhouse willingly, sir," said Weldon; "but the girl won't hear to it and she has consented to do as Mrs. Comstock asks of her. The poor thing cried all night for isn't she in love with Tom Burns, as clever and honest a lad as ever stepped? But she won't budge in her decision and I came to plead for her."

There was an expression in Comstock's face which no man had ever seen there in all his life. He rang his bell sharply and sent the servant to ask Mrs. Comstock to come into the library. When she entered she started back in amazement at the spectacle of her mild-mannered husband, standing behind his table with blazing eyes. She saw Weldon and knew what was coming. She threw up one arm as if to avoid a blow and sought to speak. Before she could do so the words came from him as from some live volcano:

"Madam, you must be mad. Do you think I am so poor a thing that I would accept any result by such means as you have been using—even to the saving of my soul? Do you esteem my honor so lightly as to believe that I would allow my name to be tarnished as you and your disreputable associates have sought to tarnish it? Do you believe that I would have retained an office secured by such means, or permitted you to gratify a foolish vanity by such a sacrifice? Had your plan succeeded it would have been impossible to have longer lived with you. My name will not go before the convention tomorrow. I will never touch the dirty pool of politics again. If Fox ever enters my house again I will cane him. Weldon's pension will be doubled. Good morning." And he strode heavily out of the room.

The member who answers to the roll call from the thirty-ninth district can turn a jack four times hand-running while looking you squarely in the eye and drink a dozen "highballs" at a sitting. Mr. and Mrs. Comstock remain at home.

TESTED WITH SALT.

How an Apache Chief Selected Warriors for a Hard Campaign.

In the early days of Union Pacific railroading, Victoria, Nana and the present Geronimo, the three chiefs of the Arizona Apaches, with 100 of the best bucks, came through to Green River, Wyo. They had heard of the "heap wagon and no hoss" and had come to stop the train. They made a lasso of rawhide and fifty men on each side held on to the rope as the freight came down the Wasatch divide. The engine driver saw, when several miles away, what the Indians were up to, so he whistled "off brakes," and opening his throttle let her loose. The cowcatcher struck the rope and hurled the Indians in all directions, literally tearing them to pieces, headless, armless and legless. The three chiefs went south to their cactus plants much crestfallen. Before they selected these men the old Chief Victoria had them all eat a piece of rock salt about as big as a pecan, run swiftly about 100 yards, sit down on a rock or log and cross their legs. Then he watched the vibration of the feet which were crossed. The feet which vibrated the longest strokes he declined to accept for a severe duty or a dangerous trip, or for one that was at all hazardous. But he accepted the feet which vibrated short, distinct and regular strokes. Now, what did that old chief know about pulsation of the arterial system or of heart action, and, indeed, about salt in the system? I have lived near to Indian reservations and have had occasion often to survey over their lands for railroads and other objects, and since this salt controversy I have wondered where old Victoria got his idea. Is not the child of the sage brush plains better posted than his paleface brother?—New York Herald.

Helped a Poor Artist.

The million left by Sam Lewis, the notorious London usurer, and the benefactions that have come to light since his death continue to be a nine-days' wonder among his acquaintances in London. Beginning his career as money lender comparatively late and very humbly, he made money with marvelous rapidity. One reason for this was that he never lost any, or hardly ever, even at the gaming tables, where he was delighted to take his turn. To the poor people who constantly applied to him for loans he always replied that a poor person could not afford to borrow. An artist not long ago paid a visit to the financier and told his story over the cigar and glass of wine which Sam Lewis had always at hand. The artist's request was a modest one—he wanted only £50. "I could not afford to lend it to you," said the prince of usurers, "but I don't mind asking your acceptance of it"—and he handed the astonished applicant a £50 note. This story, which the narrator vouches for, seems to belie the assertion lately made that in Sam Lewis' case only "the dead hand" has parted with possessions on which the living hand opened never.

Russia's Many Waterways.

No other country is so prodigally endowed with navigable rivers as Russia. The rivers of Russia have their sources within a comparatively few miles of each other, all of the great streams rising within the area of the broad plateau of the north, so that it was no difficult feat to connect the headwaters of the numerous rivers. The construction of less than 400 miles of actual canals, made it possible to travel by barge from Archangel on the Arctic, to Astrakan on the Caspian, a distance of more than 3,000 miles, from St. Petersburg to the foot of the Urals, and from the Baltic to the Black Sea by three distinct routes, to say nothing of Moscow and numerous other inland cities which were brought into direct water communication with all parts of the empire.—Engineering Magazine.

Probate Court's Technical Task.

Some time ago Anthony Holland and wife, highly respected residents of Tallahatchie county, Mississippi, were found dead in a wood near their home. They were a most devoted couple and the conclusion arrived at was that Mrs. Holland was accidentally shot, Mr. Holland through grief committing suicide with the remaining barrel of the shotgun which he carried. The estate was settled on the basis of this supposition, but on appeal to the courts it was shown that when the bodies were found that of the wife was still warm, while Mr. Holland's was cold. Therefore the woman must have survived her husband and the court so decided.

BEARDSLEY ARCHITECTURE.

New and Unconventional School Now Much Favored in Europe.

When Aubrey Beardsley had nothing else to do he was wont to put a pencil to paper and, without withdrawing it, outline the figure of a woman. Sometimes he would thus draw the head of a satyr, prolonging the arms to represent limbs of a tree, foliage laden. He had a habit of twisting the torso in such wise that a portion of the rear elevation was to be seen advanced well to both right and left in the convolutions. This was his style in illustration. Over in Europe—France especially—a new school of architecture has much vogue just now. It may be called the school which represents Beardsleyism in architecture. The exponents of this school, practically founded by Mr. Bing, have a way of fashioning adornments, exterior and interior, fashioning structures themselves in the twisted, impossible manner which Mr. Beardsley, following the windings of a vagrant pencil, placed before the world as art productions. "They call it l'Art Nouveau over there," remarked John Mead Howells, a New York architect of considerable not. "I am inclined to the belief that Burne-Jones and Rossetti and others of their pre-Raphaelite school originated this new art. Beardsley, to be sure, while but an illustrator, did many things which seem to be in a measure copies in structures I have seen in Paris. I would not say that they were actually copies, but they represent the queer, twisted and distorted human figures, the oddities in curves and other outlandish shapes which violate all the canons of art. The smaller buildings in the recent exposition had manifestations of this new school which fully exploit its eccentricities. I saw a number of tenement houses in the Champs Elysees which are covered all over with the strange figures. The thing developed just about the break between the old and new salon. The new people have pushed their ideas—if they can be called such, for, really, they resemble fused construction, and that without design—and have made some progress over there. Here? Well, I can not say that I have encountered much of it, or, indeed, can recall a single manifestation."

Cheese It.

"Cheese it" is in an English slang dictionary of 1811, and the definition shows that the phrase was then used in the same sweet sense as that of today. And the phrase came banging and bumping down the last century. The ingenious George Augustus Sala in his "Gaslight and Daylight" (1859) wrote in the chapter "Strollers at Dumbledowndeary" about young Harry, who held earnest parley with members of the upper gallery who were pelting him and his friends with nutshells and broken piles. "Two or three 'halloa!' and 'now, thens!' accompanied by a strong recommendation to 'cheese it' (i. e., act of cessation), cause these trifling annoyances to cease." You see that Mr. Sala thought it necessary to explain the phrase to his genteel audience. The dictionaries all say that "cheese it" is thought to be a corruption of "cease it." Maybe they think so. We are inclined to believe in a more remote derivation. "Cease it!" is too easy.—Boston Journal.

A Chance for Tesla.

The president of the French Academy of Sciences at the last meeting of that body announced that Mme. Guzmann, a believer in the plurality of inhabited worlds, had bequeathed to the academy a sum of 100,000 francs, to be given to any person who shall have succeeded in entering into communication with one of the heavenly bodies with the exception of the planet Mars. The "will," M. Levy adds, wisely provides that on each occasion that prizes could not be awarded during the space of five years in succession the compound interest will be devoted to the promotion of the serious work of astronomy. The intention of the founder will be scrupulously carried out and the prize will be put up for competition in the present year.

Followed Hat from Fast Train.

Thomas Flemming of Delavan, Wis., walked off a Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul express train going at the rate of forty-seven miles an hour and escaped with a split head, broken nose, bruised eyes and sore body. He boarded the train for Milwaukee. At Kansasville, west of Racine, he stood on the platform of a coach and his hat blew off, and he followed after it. A posse of fifty citizens went in search of Flemming, expecting to find his mangled body, but he had struck in a snowdrift, was rendered unconscious, revived and walked to Kansasville, where he was found.

Deeds Greater Than Words.

Deeds are greater than words. Deeds have such a life, mute but undeniable, and grow as living trees and fruit trees do; they people the vacuity of time and make it green and worthy. Why should the oak prove logically that it ought to grow, and will grow? Plant it, try it; what gifts of diligent judicious assimilation and secretion it has, of progress and resistance, of force to grow, will then declare themselves.—Carlyle.

How to Build.

Our business is not to build quickly, but to build upon a right foundation and in a right spirit. Life is more than a mere competition as between man and man; it is not who can be done first, but who can work the best; it is not who can rise highest in the shortest time, but who is working most patiently and lovingly, in accordance with the designs of God.—Dr. Joseph Parker.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm — A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Farm Separators in Kansas.

George Morgan, in an address before the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, said in part: The value of the farm separator to the private dairyman has been fully demonstrated. The experimental stages have passed and the testimony of all who have made a careful, intelligent comparison between the gravity system and the modern separator are practically united in favor of the latter for the private dairyman. The question as to its advantages in localities where creameries are established is one upon which there is much difference of opinion. The most serious problem is operating expenses. This applies both to the creamery manager and to the patron, whether the creamery is a co-operative one or a proprietary institution, and all are vitally interested in the expense account. I think the separator will assist greatly in solving this problem. It means a minimum of labor with a maximum of profit. The product is carried in a condensed form from the patron to the creamery, and the expense greatly reduced. In this state, dairying is incidental to beef and pork production, and as a consequence the conditions at this time are peculiar and perplexing. The farmer has an undesirable way of putting the creamery on half rations, forgetting that few people appreciate the full dinner pail more than the Kansas creamery man. When times and crops are good, it is not uncommon to find a farmer at milking time quietly sitting upon the fence watching the calves do the milking. When reverses come, however, he finds that the cow and the creamery are his best friends. When large investments are made in skimming stations and these spells of carelessness strike the patron, it is often very disastrous to the management. I feel safe in saying that fully one-third of the skimming stations in this state do not pay running expenses from October to May. It is in these localities that the farm separator will be of the greatest benefit. If the creamery patronage is light, the expenses are correspondingly light.

I think the average cost of a skimming station is about $1,000 and the average cost of operating is about $600 a year. This will, of course, include taxes, interest, insurance, labor and fuel. A great many plants now running in Kansas do not average 1,500 pounds of milk every other day during the fall and winter. Forty cows at twenty pounds of milk per day per cow will produce 1,600 pounds of milk in two days. Here, then, is an investment of $1,000, with $50 per month running expenses necessary to take care of the milk of forty cows. On its face this cannot pay. At points where patronage is liberal any radical change would not be advisable. It will to a great extent adjust itself in its own way, but at weaker, non-paying stations much good can be accomplished by the use of the farm separator, especially in outlying districts where the distance is too great to haul the whole milk. True, to carry out the plan the farmer must make the investment on his own account, but for this he is amply compensated in the increased value of the skim milk and the convenience of having it on his farm morning and evening to be fed while warm, sweet and fresh and in the best possible condition for giving to young animals. The milk patron often suffers a severe loss on account of souring of his Sunday milk during the heated term. He also loses the gain by feeding the new milk to the calf for six or eight weeks, on account of the danger incurred in feeding milk returned from the creamery. Where the milk is fed from the farm separator, the calf can be put upon skim milk at fifteen days old by careful management and the use of kafir corn meal. It has been my experience that patrons with ten to fifteen cows can earn enough in one year to pay for a $100 separator. Each farmer can figure out for himself whether or not it will pay.

Poultry Briefs.

The pheasants are coming into favor and we may expect to see before many years some such interest manifested in them as is now shown in the Belgian hares. At the poultry shows they are now given a good deal of attention, and are being exhibited in their most pleasing aspects. Among those that are said to be best suited to aviaries we might mention Silver Pheasants, and Golden Pheasants. The Silver Pheasants are the commonest of those kept in confinement.

* * *

The Rhode Island Experiment station two years ago began an investigation as to the causes of mortality among incubator chicks. During the spring and summer of 1899, 826 dead chicks were examined. Of these 387 were males and 439 were females, showing that during the time the chicks were in the brooder a larger proportion of females died than males. About one-third of all the chicks died as the result of abnormalities produced by bad conditions during incubation. These "bad conditions" were alternate heat and cold in too great degrees. About 16 per cent of the dead chicks were killed by tuberculous. Improper feeding caused the greatest losses, by disarranging the gall bladder, liver or intestines. Of the chicks examined 75.7 per cent had abnormal livers; 33.6 per cent had various forms of intestinal disorders.

* * *

One of the great losses was caused by heredity and shows that the parents of our broods must be carefully selected. A part of the report on the above investigation says: "(1) Congenital or constitutional weakness, resulting (a) in liability to sickness, or in cases, (b) in actual malformations, e. g. the records show unusual mortality in the lot No. 7B, made up of chicks from breeding pens, No. 6, 9 and 5. The results from hatch of eggs from pen No. 5, were remarkably poor. Of fifty eggs from pen No. 5, only twenty-seven proved to be fertile, but nineteen chicks hatched, and of these twelve died within ten days after hatching. Six were tuberculous, all twelve had enlarged gall bladders. The tuberculosis was apparently contracted after hatching through an infected brooder, three cases of tuberculosis having appeared among previous occupants of the brooder. Not one of the lot reached maturity. The cause of the later deaths was the same as indicated above. This case of excessive mortality seems directly attributable to congential weakness, inherited from the parents, and not to conditions during incubation or to improper feeding, since chicks from other parents under exactly similar conditions did well." It is somewhat of a surprise to find tuberculosis cutting so much of a figure in the case, though it is known that in Germany about one-tenth of all the fowls that die, succumb to tuberculosis. We have not hitherto been on guard against this dreaded disease among our poultry.

Descendants of the Jungle Fowl.

The general tendency of modern poultry farming is away from the natural methods. It is a part of the divine plan that man should improve upon Nature and Nature's methods, but success cannot be attained by ignoring the lessons which Nature teaches.

Modern methods on the poultry farm are the results of man's efforts to meet the imperative demand for increased food supply resulting from an increased and ever increasing population. Centuries ago man's brain energies began to be directed towards this problem. The result has been that the Jungle Fowl (Gallus bankiva, and various allied species from India, the Malay Peninsula and Archipelago) have been chosen and modified by selective breeding to conform to certain demands, chief among which are adaptability to climate, somewhat arbitrary standards of coloring, increased size, and, most conspicuous of all, increased reproductive capacity. The immediate results are seen in the ever increasing number of new breeds and varities, each especially adapted to special conditions, to meet particular needs.

But the process of Nature in poultry raising is too slow to meet the demands of a hungering population. The rate of multiplication must be increased; the process of growth must be stimulated. Science (i. e., common sense) is the agent which has been invoked, and not in vain. Scientific poultry raising is already at work, and is accomplishing wonders. Pause for a moment to consider what would be the price of poultry meat and eggs if we were still obliged to depend upon wild poultry for these staples! Note how considerably the cost of living has been reduced by those practical students, who by judicious experimentation have succeeded in growing several pounds of poultry meat where but one grew before. (Compare the weight of a good Brahma, Plymouth Rock, or of other improved breeds with the two or three pound Jungle cock.)—Rhode Island Experiment Station Bulletin.

It is generally admitted that a cow will give more and richer milk if always milked by the same person. But, as it is manifestly sometimes inconvenient, and at others impracticable to comply with this rule, it is believed by good dairymen that it is better to train a cow to be occasionally milked by a different person. A cow's behavior is largely a matter of habit, and neither inconvenient nor bad habits should be encouraged.

Col. B. W. Wren, traffic manager of the Plant system, says that the shipment of oranges this year from Florida is beyond all comparison with former years. This year the shipments will reach 1,250,000 boxes. He says: "This is the best yield of oranges Florida has made since the freeze of 1895, when everybody thought the death knell of orange growing had been sounded."

Things About the Fameuse Apple.

The history of the Fameuse apple in Vermont reaches back to 1700, and in Canada a hundred years further. This history is not so well known as that of the Indian wars, but it is fully as interesting, and has quite as close connection with early colonization and with the subsequent progress of civilization. In fact, students of history are coming to see more and more that wars and politics are not so significant as industry, invention and agriculture.

Sometimes, however, the Fameuse seedlings varied more or less from the parental type, and came to be recognized as separate varieties, like the McIntosh, Shiawassee, Scarlett Pippin, Louise, La Victorie, etc., so there are now a whole group of the Fameuse progeny. These have been sought out and described and their histories recorded, along with the romantic tale of the original Fameuse, by the Vermont Experiment Station. A new bulletin by the horticulturist on "Apples of the Fameuse Type" tells the story. It is at once a paper on a modern horticultural topic and a trifling contribution to American history.

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Gov. VanSant is making an excellent record and we predict that he will be re-elected by a large majority in 1902. He is honest and fearless, and has the confidence of the people.

One of the most liberal gifts ever made was the donation of $5,000,000.00 by Andrew Carnegie to the noble purpose of providing an endowment for a home for the disabled and superannuated employes of the Carnegie company. Rich men of Mr. Carnegie's stamp are a blessing.

Thief River Falls is not going to have a boom, but will enjoy a steady and substantial gain during the next few years. It is the distributing point for one of the richest sections in the state, and when our resources are fully developed it will be the largest city in Northern Minnesota.

The State Game and Fish commission is up in arms against a bill introduced by Senator J. H. Smith which requires warrants for the arrest of violaters of the game laws, and prevents prosecution for illegal killing of moose, caribou and deer unless the whole body is found. Game Warden Fullerton states that if this bill became a law it would nullify all the game laws now in existence.

Senator Myran last week introduced in the state senate a memorial to congress asking for the appointment of a federal commission to investigate drainage conditions in the Red River valley. The memorial recites that over 20,000,000 acres of land are exposed to overflow and that the annual damages by these inundations averages over $500,000.

Experts in raising wheat say that the farmers who sustained a partial loss of crop last year should get their seed wheat from a more favored location. There is no question but that a change of wheat is occassionally most desirable and especially this spring. To raise good crops it is absolutely necessary to get good, plump seed The Great Northern railroad has taken the matter up in the interest of the farmers along its line—and for its own interest also—and will ship wheat for seed at one-half the usual freight rates, and farmers should take advantage of this liberal offer.

A FISH STORY.

Future Prospects for the Red Lakers.

The supporters of the bill to allow settlers to fish in the Red lake with nets advance the theory that the twin cities can be furnished fresh fish at a very low cost and they also claim that the quality of the fish in the lake will be greatly improved, as the lake is at present overstocked to such an extent that fish die off simply from overcrowding, and those that do survive are the older and hardier varieties, which are not so good for food. It is also stated that fresh water clam shells of an extremely high grade exist in enormous quantities in the rivers tributary to the lake. The shells are used in the manufacture of buttons and are worth about $20 per ton. Other industries such as the gathering of cranberries along the shores of the lake will soon give employment to nearly 1000 men.

We have unlimited money to loan on improved farms. Will loan on final receiver's receipt. Interest reasonable. No delays. Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office over First State Bank.

THE G. N.

Could Be Induced to Remove the Depot Down Town.

Attorney Horace Bagley last week wrote to James J. Hill asking what inducements would be required to secure the location of the Great Northern depot in a more central portion of the city and received the following reply from Mr. Hill's son:

St. Paul, Minnesota, March 15th, 1901.—Mr. Horace Bagley, Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

Dear Sir: Referring to your letter of March 12th, addressed to President Jas. J. Hill, in regard to changing the location of our depot in your town.

I would be glad to have you advise me whether in addition to furnishing us the additional ground required your people would be willing to bear the expense of moving the depot. As you are no doubt aware, earnings of most northwestern roads have decreased considerable over last year and there has not been very much decrease in operating expenses. Therefore, it has been necessary for us to be very cautious, and we have put off doing work that is not absolutely necessary. If the moving of the depot could be accomplished by no expense to the railway company, I might then consider the proposition.

Yours Truly,
Jas. N. Hill,
Third Vice President.

While the letter does not state postively that the change will be made, it is very encouraging. The proposed new location considered by most of the residents here is the old planing mill site, and it is thought that this can be purchased from the lumber company at a reasonable price. The location of the depot on the spur would also indicate that the Great Northern has no intention of going north of this point.

The matter will probably be submitted to the city council.

SALE ANNOUNCED

Of the Red Lake Logging Railroad.

The Red Lake Transportation company's logging railroad, it is said, has been sold to the Northern Pacific. This road was built by Halverson & Richards from Nebish to the Red Lake, and it is about 15 miles long. It was constructed three years ago for the purpose of hauling logs for the St. Hilaire and Crookston Lumber company, which has about 300,000,000 feet of logs in this region, and includes a contract for a yearly haul of 30,000,000 feet. Probably one-third of the timber has been taken off, and it is not known whether the sale of the road will carry with it the logging contract or not.

Revenue Changes.

After July 1 the government will get $40,000,000 less money from the revenue tax. The tax has been cut on tobacco, cigars and beer and on some conveyances and other evidences of business transactions, and has been removed entirely after July 1 on the following:

Bank checks, certificates of deposit, promissory notes, mortgages, leases, manifests, power of attorney, protests, money orders, express receipts, charter party, insurance, certificates of damage and certificates not otherwise specified, chewing gum, proprietary medicines, perfumery and cosmetics, commercial broker's tax.

Auction Sale.

At the Dick Edmunds farm, 2 miles southwest of Thief River Falls, commencing at 10 a. m. Saturday, March 30, 1901.

Four horses, 1 yearling colt, 15 head of cattle, wagons, harness, Deering mower, hay rake, 3 horse seeder, breaking plow, binder, 1 horse cultivator, bob sleds, cutter, buggy. Also all of the household goods including organ.

All the above and other articles too numerous to mention will be sold to the highest bidder at the place and on the date above set forth. Terms: Cash under $10, bankable paper over that amount.

F. F. Purdy, Owner. H. M. Hicks, Auctioneer.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Advisability of Organizing One to Be Discussed.

A meeting will be held Saturday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. C. J. Knox for the purpose of organizing a society to establish a a public library in Thief River Falls, and all ladies interested in a movement of this kind are cordially invited to attend. After a society is organized it is the intention to give socials and entertainments at which an admission fee will be charge, the proceeds to be devoted to the purchase of books. Members will also be requested to write letters to philanthropic people, asking for donations to the library.

A bulletin just issued shows the gross area of Minnesota to be 83,395 square miles. The state has a water surface of 4,160 square miles, which is exceeded only by that of Florida. The total area of the United States is 3,622,933 square miles, including Alaska and Hawaii. Itasca county is the largest in Minnesota, with an area of 5,575 square miles, over four times as large as the state of Rhode Island, which has only 1,250 square miles.

There is every indication that the bill changing the form of primary elections will be enacted into a law. This is practically an extension of the law of the last session, which applied only to Hennepin county, with several changes and amendments. It does away with the "caucus" and convention, a regular election being held, the same as the one in November, only that the candidates on each ticket receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared the nominees of that party, and shall be placed on the ticket for the ensuing election in November. In its present status, the bill exempts candidates for state, township and village elections from this act—there nominations will be made as heretofore.

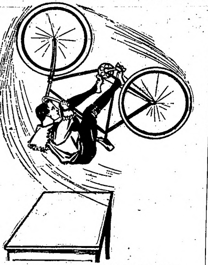
Bicyclist Turns Somersault

There is a young American over in London whose hair raising feats with a bicycle on the music hall stage make the hoi polloi gasp in amazement. He is away ahead of anything in his line that the Londoners have seen, and he is doing one stunt that is cleverer than anything he ever did on this side of the water—that is, to turn a somersault with his wheel in motion, carrying the machine with him and landing without losing a stroke with the pedals.

Bud Snyder is the cyclist's name, and he is now performing at the London Pavilion. His tricks have caught the town. Small boys are smashing themselves up in the highways trying to imitate Snyder, and it would not be surprising if some new Ernest Torah Hooley in the medical line were to secure a corner on splints, bandages, and lotions in anticipation of what is almost certain to happen to the younger generation of British lions as a result of the fever of excitement into which Snyder has thrown them.



AN AMAZING FEAT WHICH HAS ASTONISHED LONDON.

Snyder is not only the originator of the somersault trick, but he is likewise the only performer who can clear a distance of twenty-two feet through the air with his wheel. His control of the bicycle is remarkable, for in the most complicated maneuvers he never loses his seat, grip or footing. He is a fair, thickset, athletic-looking young man of 25. Like most Americans who have made a hit over there, he likes London immensely. Asked how he came to engage in trick riding professionally, he said:

"Well, you see, I was always very fond of my wheel—preferred it, in fact, to anything in the world; and I soon learned to do such out-of-the-way tricks with it that I took to professional trick riding for the sheer love of the thing. That was in 1896, and never since have I had occasion to regret the step."

"Don't you have to practice much?"

"Well, I never do less than half an hour a morning. For one thing, you see, I am constantly improving myself—and new tricks are not learned in a day, especially mine, for I am called the break-neck cyclist, you know."

"Do you have to observe any special rules in your mode of life?"

"Naturally I have to keep in perfect form always and cannot smoke or drink. If I did I shouldn't be up to my work at all—lose all my nerve, in fact. As it is, however, by eating the plainest and lightest of food five or six hours before working, and always going to bed early and rising in good time, I never feel the least little bit nervous. As a matter of fact, I regard that as the secret of my success."

"What about your mounts?"

"They're partly of my own designs, being built especially strong; but even so I have had machines smash under me by the dozen; but so long as I don't break, it's all right. You see, my tricks are mostly very sensational ones, and what adds to my difficulties is the fact that I often have to perform on very small stages—from a cyclist's point of view. At Birmingham I often heard members of the audience betting ten to one that I wouldn't do my ten-foot drop. Of course, I was mighty sorry to disappoint them, you know, but I couldn't help doing it all the same; could I?"

"Have you ever had any accidents?"

"Yes; for instance, at Notting Hill my stairs smashed under me, but I always manage to come out on top somehow. The worst I ever had, however—for swollen shins count for nothing—was when I was beginning to get into the somersault trick, for I fell on my head and got my neck twisted. It was like this for three days."

He let his head fall on one side till it touched his right shoulder.

"How long does it take you to learn tricks?"

"It all depends. I was the first to introduce one-wheel riding with a safety, while nobody before my time dreamed of climbing tables with a cycle or jumping. To begin with progress seemed a bit slow, but once fairly under way the new feats did not take so long to learn. For instance, it took me nine months to learn to make my machine hop sideways up a dozen stairs and drop ten feet sheer on the other side. I got my legs and ankles cut several times, too, and had to take special exercises in order to strengthen my bones to stand the shocks.

"Curiously enough, although I am the originator of somersaults on safeties, it only took me twelve weeks to learn. At the time everybody thought I was mad; for the chances of breaking one's neck are quite surprising. If ever I touch the table with my head that is bound to be the result!

"Though you might not think it, diving off my mount in motion into a tank is one of the riskiest things I do. Indeed a friend of mine named Ferrell got killed in attempting it."

Bud Snyder can do so many wonderful things that he does not require to do one trick at a time. For instance, one of his feats—perhaps the most marvelous—consists in starting from one end of the stage, jumping his machine on to an ordinary table, riding down some steps at the other end, doing a clean somersault over another table, landing on the other side, still riding his bicycle, and up a spring board, from which he dives off his machine while it is in motion, plunging into a tank of water ahead.

"Traffic in Life Blood."

The New York state factory inspector says in his report to the legislature that there has been vast improvement in tenement and dwelling house workshops, but that much remains to be done. He pointedly refers to the fact that "men who hold their heads high in the business world and presumably some also in the religious world indirectly traffic in the very life blood of their fellow men."

New York to Have a Fine Library.

Sixteen out of the 129 largest cities have a greater sum invested in public libraries—that is, owned by the city—than New York. During the next two years, however, there will be erected in New York city the finest library building, excepting the congressional library at Washington, in the United States.

CARIBOU BEATS GREYHOUND.

Interesting Test of Speed Over Snow in Maine Woods.

A man lately returned from the woods says that a caribou can run faster than any other animal on legs. He says, according to a Boston correspondent in the New York Sun: I have a friend who owns a greyhound, and he always maintained that no animal could outrun the dog—at least, he thought so until lately, when he stood by and saw the fleet dog run off his feet by a herd of caribou that didn't seem to be in much of a hurry, either. One day this friend of mine was bragging about the dog to an old woods guide, when the latter said that he could find an animal that would leave the hound so far behind that he would think he was anchored. This touched my friend in a sensitive spot, and a wager of $10 was made on a race between the hound and the first caribou we came across. Finally the guide succeeded in getting the dog after some caribou, a herd of four, found standing like so many statues on the ice in the middle of one of the big ponds of the Penobscot west branch region. You know a caribou trots instead of running like most wild animals. There had been a good fall of snow, a light rain which formed a thick crust and then about three inches more of snow. The dog went after them like a wild locomotive, and the caribou started. At first they didn't appear to be going very fast, but as the hound drew up to them they let out a link. The hound was running his prettiest, and before the caribou had had time to think he was right up on them. Then they put on steam, and it was a sight to see them go. Why, when they struck their gait they pulled away from that dog as though he had been anchored, and by the time they had reached the end of the pond the hound wasn't half way across. When the dog came back he was sadder and wiser, and his master looked dazed. To be sure, a greyhound is fast, but when you come to stack greyhounds or any other kind of hounds against caribou you are in too fast a game—sure.

Boy Murderer a Cunning Prisoner.

There are now sixteen prisoners in solitary confinement in the Massachusetts state prison at Charlestown, the most dangerous of the lot being Jesse Pomeroy, "the boy murderer." He is constantly laying plans to escape, and keeps the guards ever on the alert to thwart them. He once pulled down the ventilator over his cell door and made a saw of a portion of the material. Then the place was walled up and fresh air introduced into his cell in other ways. He has now been imprisoned on a life sentence twenty-seven years.

MINUTE CREATURES.

Some Microbes That May Prove Useful Discovered by Bacteriologists.

The bacteriologists are learning to take new views of the minute creatures which they study. When the startling world of micro-organisms was discovered there was nothing but hard words for it. The first bacteria found were those of disease, and the bacteriologists were so horrified by their misdeeds that they condemned the whole tribe of micro-organisms to death without inquiring further into the matter. The humorist and the comic artist lent aid in blasting their reputations, making jokes and drawing imaginary pictures of microbes with horrible jaws, eyes and tentacles, until the mere word bacteria came to mean something dreadful. It was much like mentioning a cobra or boa constrictor to even speak of them. Pasteur—the great, wise Pasteur—so feared bacteria that he kept a bowl of scalding water by his plate at meals, dipping his dishes, knives and forks into it before using them by way of preventing the smallest microbe from passing his lips—and did, in fact, prevent it so effectually that he ruined his digestion, poor man. For in scalding the evil-disposed bacteria to death he scalded many more that were necessary in carrying on the work of his stomach, and so deprived himself of their aid. The bacteriologists now know that there are many well meaning microbes among their charges. The microbe tribes are made up like those of the larger creatures. They are useful, harmless cows and dogs and sheep and poultry as well as murderous tigers, lions and vampire bats in the microbe world. In fact, the useful bacteria are in the majority, just as the useful animals outnumber the savage ones. The bacteriologists have lately found several most promising species among them. There is one tribe, for example, that may be turned into scavengers. They are very greedy for refuse of all kinds, and it is suggested by the sanguine that in time they may be raised in large tanks and made to devour the garbage of cities. Another microbe in favor just now is one that furnishes light. The bacteriologists are very guarded in talking of it, and do not want to promise too much, but they admit that this new micro-organism may be induced to give serviceable light in the future. It is the microbe that makes phosphorescent fishes luminous. Heretofore it was generally thought that this light came from phosphorous like that used in matches, but the experiments with these microbes prove otherwise. By placing the flesh of fresh haddocks or herrings in a weak brine and keeping it at 40 degrees above zero for a few days the fish, as well as the brine itself becomes luminous, giving off pale green light.—Chicago Record.

ST. HELENA HAS A BOOM.

Boer Prisoners of War Add Life and Activity to the Island.

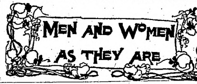
Perhaps not since Napoleon was an involuntary resident at St. Helena has the island risen to so much prominence as it may now claim to enjoy. For this reason the report of Gov. Sterndale, dated August, 1900, will be found of unusual interest. The imports have jumped from £24,365 in 1897, to £91,699 in 1899, and for 1900 a much larger increase is anticipated. Labor is in demand at good wages; there is no want among the industrious, and "it is a pleasure to record," says the governor, "that, although money has been more plentiful and the temptations of the public houses greater, serious crime has been absent and petty crimes less than in the previous year. The cost of living has, however, greatly increased, and during the present year the prices of food have doubled and quadrupled, so that what used to be considered necessaries of life, such as milk, butter, eggs and meat, are now luxuries, and the principal food of the poor, i. e., fish, is both scarce and expensive. With the increased garrison and the great number of prisoners of war, a large quantity of fish, which is plentiful enough in the sea, could profitably be disposed of daily were the people energetic enough to catch them. I have always advocated a fishery company here, worked by English capital and labor, and had such a one been started as projected in 1896-1897, it would have been reaping a golden harvest just now, both in salted and fresh fish. The aspect of the place has greatly changed; instead of the quiet monotony of past years, Jamestown is a scene of noisy activity, and the perils of our roads are considerably increased by four-in-hand mule wagons driven by reckless Kaffir boys."

Plymouth Church to Have Club.

Time has laid its hand upon the policy of historic Plymouth church. The admirers and followers of Beecher are slipping away from church to grave and younger men now are directing the affairs of Plymouth. Dr. Hillis believes in surrounding himself with young men of energy and ability. With this object in view he will tonight organize in the lecture room the Plymouth League of Young Men. Meetings will be held weekly. A building near the church has been purchased and it will be turned into a club house.—New York Press.

Irresolution Shows Weakness.

In matters of great concern, and which must be done, there is no surer argument of a weak mind than irresolution; to be undetermined where the case is so plain and the necessity so urgent; to be always intending to live a new life; but never to find time to set about it; this is as if a man should put off eating, and drinking, and sleeping, from one day and night to another, till he is starved and destroyed.—Tillotson.



MEN AND WOMEN AS THEY ARE

We gaze afar, and wonder why
The world is ruled by might,
We fail to see the distant shore,
Where nothing lives save right.

Air bubbles to the surface rise,
While worth is hid below,
And trusting, we forbear to ask,
Why cometh weal or woe.

We see man blindly passing by
The noble, and the good.
The glitter of a passing flash
Is better understood.

'Tis thought, the High and Holy,
To dreariness portend,
God gives His guardian angels charge,
They all things comprehend.

Nervous Prostration.

A Noted Boston Woman Describes its Symptoms and Terrors.—Two Severe Cases Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

ADELE WILLIAMSON.

"I am so nervous! no one ever suffered as I do! There isn't a well inch in my body. I honestly believe my lungs are diseased, my chest pains me so, but I have no cough. I am so weak at my stomach, and have indigestion terribly, and palpitation of the heart; am losing flesh; and this headache and backache nearly kills me, and yesterday I had hysterics.

"There is a weight in the lower part of my bowels, bearing down all the time, with pains in my groins and thighs—I can't sleep, walk, or sit, and blue—oh goodness! I am simply the most miserable of women."

This is a most vivid description of a woman suffering with nervous prostration, caused by inflammation or some other diseased condition of the womb.

No woman should allow herself to reach such a perfection of misery when there is no need of it. Read about Miss Williamson's case and how she was cured.

Two Bad Cases of Nervous Prostration Cured.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham;—I was suffering such tortures from nervous prostration that life was a burden. I could not sleep at all, and was too weak to walk across the floor. My heart was affected so that often I could not lie down at all without almost suffocating. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it worked like magic. I feel that your medicine has been of inestimable benefit to me."

Miss Adele Williamson,
196 N. Boulevard, Atlanta, Ga.

"I had nervous prostration terribly, caused by female weakness. I suffered everything; was unable to eat, sleep, or work. After a while I was induced to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I really began to improve on taking the first bottle. I continued to take the medicine, and am now better in every way, and feel like a different person. I am simply a well woman."

Walked Thirty Miles to Wed.

Thirty miles across country, with the temperature at freezing and the roads rough was the route Nellie Funk and her sweetheart traveled in their journey to Gretna Green.

Nellie is sixteen years old, and Benjamin Surdam three years her senior. Her parents, who live in Norfolk, objected to their marriage. The young couple planned an elopement. Surdam had little more than enough money to pay the minister, none at all for transportation. So he joined his bride Monday in Norfolk, and they started on foot for Millertown, N. Y., thirty miles away, where they were married.—New York World.

Three Minutes His Limit.

Senator Beveridge tells a good story on an Indiana lawyer who was something of a wag. Leaving his office one afternoon, the man stopped in a restaurant and took a drink of whisky. On the car he met a prohibition friend.

"I have quit drinking, and I feel splendid," remarked the lawyer.

"Quit drinking?" queried the prohibitionist, scenting the liquor on the lawyer's breath. "How long since?"

"Three minutes ago," he replied—Washington Post.

MADAME BAVEAS TESTIFIES.

A Distinguished Lady After Traveling Six Years in Search of Health, at Last Finds It in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 18.—(Special.)—This popular resort numbers among its patrons many of the world's most distinguished men and women, but none more so than Madame Isabelle Ellen Baveas, Life Governor of the Free Masons' Grand Lodge of England.

Madam Baveas, like most of the other visitors, came here in search of health. She was not disappointed, but her cure was not found in the virtue of the baths, but in a few boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy which she found on sale here, and which is being used and with wonderful success by a number of the visitors to Hot Springs. She says:

"I traveled almost constantly for the past six years in the interests of my Society, and my health gradually became broken down, through the change of food, water, climate, etc. The doctors told me I had diabetes, and advised me to go to the Springs, as they could do nothing for me. While there my attention was called to Dodd's Kidney Pills by a fellow sufferer, who had been greatly benefited by using them.

"I profited by her experience and bought a box, and then another, and so on until I had used seven boxes. It is with gratitude that I state that they cured me completely, and I am now able to take up the duties of life once more. I am very thankful for what Dodd's Kidney Pills have done for me, and as a grateful woman shall never hesitate to recommend them to any one suffering with Diabetes."

The very satisfactory experience of this distinguished woman should be an encouragement to all similar sufferers.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are 50c. a box, six boxes for $2.50. Buy them from your local druggist if you can. If he cannot supply you, send to the Dodd's Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

SCALDS TRAIN ROBBERS.

Colorado Road Uses Automatic Device to Discourage Bold Bandits.

The Rio Grande railroad in Colorado, has equipped its locomotives with a novel train robber killing device. It is a means of playing scalding water and steam over the bandits. There is an extra piece of steel pipe running up from the bottom of the boiler to the back of the engine cab, where it is flattened out fan-shaped, the angle of the fan embracing the front, top and sides of the blind baggage and express. Another device of practically the same kind covers the front, top and sides of the locomotive itself. Other engines have a steam pipe and hose just back of the engineer, where it is handy to grab quickly. Down near the floor of the cab in several places, where they can be reached easily, are little innocent looking buttons that connect with an air valve to the steam pipe. In less time than it takes to tell it, the engineer or fireman can touch a button and send back over the coal pile in the tender the hottest jet of water that any robber ever saw. The boilers carry a pressure of about 225 pounds, so the water near the bottom of the crown sheet will be at least at the boiling point. The amount of execution one of the "cookers," as they are called, can do in a few seconds is frightful. Should four or six robbers get on the front or top of the blind baggage and make a hostile demonstration toward the engineer they can be disposed of quickly. A slight stream will make it so hot in the neighborhood that they will be glad to get off. At the same time it will fill the air with steam, so that shooting at the engineer or fireman will be out of the question. It will be impossible to tell the direction, except the way to jump. Only once since their installation have the new machines been put to test, and that was several weeks ago in the Grand canyon, when several tramps threatened to take charge of a freight train and bully the crew into submission to their wishes. They got the conductor and brakeman "buffaloed" back about a dozen car lengths, and then started toward the engineer to make him "dig up" some coin. But the fireman had seen the whole performance and tipped off the affair to the engineer, who turned on a small stream and slowed up to see the fun. The white mist had no sooner struck the hoboes than they made a dive off the tops of the cars. The two fellows with guns who were back with the conductor and brakeman, worked their way ahead to see what caused all the excitement, when they got a few stray splashes of hot water in the face and also jumped.

Odd Wares From Manila.

The acquisition of the Philippines has begun to familiarize the American public with many of the odd wares and merchandise which are found in that archipelago, says the New York Evening Post. No part of this world is richer in shells, especially of the pearl and mother of pearl variety. For centuries there has been a steady flow of the latter to China, where they are used in enormous quantities for household decorations. Outside of these shells are others almost as useful. One variety, a sea couch, is cut through obliquely and according to the angle of the saw the resulting segment is a spoon, a ladle, a saucer, plate, cup, or bowl. After cutting they are cleaned and polished, making a handsome object. It looks like colored porcelain, but is far tougher and stronger. A shell spoon or bowl can be dropped without danger of breaking and will withstand hot water and cold as well as wood. Another variety of shell is employed for buttons. The turbinates are the favorites. They range through a hundred colors and patterns and take a very high gloss. When cut by the natives beauty of surface rather than of outline appears to be the main object. The most popular shape is oblong. Next to this is an oval, and then follow such figures as the rounded triangle, which with eyelets are retailed in Manila for five cents.

What Did He Mean?

The late Charles Spurgeon was fond of recording the following incident: While he was leaving the tabernacle after a sermon one Sunday a man approached him and, addressing him by name, shook his hand warmly. "I see," said he, "that you have forgotten me, sir; and yet you once did me the greatest service that one man can do another." "And what service was that?" asked Spurgeon. "You buried my wife, sir," responded the stranger, his eyes suffused with tears.

Late Queen Victoria's Religion.

Queen Victoria was profoundly religious. She believed in the efficacy of prayer. She was a regular Bible reader, and frequently used a well-worn Bible that belonged to General Gordon, and was presented by his sister to the queen, who acknowledged the gift in an autograph letter. At the same time she did not permit her religious convictions to influence the subtle intricacies of statecraft.—Chicago Record.

Landlord System in the South.

AFTER-EFFECTS OF LA GRIPPE.

The after-effects of the grip are often disastrous. It is commonly known to the medical fraternity that the numerous ailments and complications which follow the grip are apt to be more serious than the acute stage of the disease.

Some people have the grip very lightly. They may be confined to the house only a day or two and yet a long train of disagreeable, disabling symptoms follow. All sorts of tonics and stimulating remedies have been devised to meet this condition. None of them can compare in results with Peruna.

Every one who has had the grip ought to take a short course of Peruna. Read what the following people have to say about it.

Gentlemen—"I have taken Peruna now for two weeks, and find I am very much relieved. I feel that my cure will be permanent. I have also taken it for la grippe, and take pleasure in recommending Peruna as an excellent remedy to all fellow sufferers."—M. W. Howard.

Grip Produces Catarrh.

Henry Distin, the inventor and maker of all the band instruments for the Henry Distin Mfg. Co., at Williamsport, Pa., writes:

1441 South Ninth Street,
Philadelphia, Pa., May 6, 1899.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Dear Sir:—"I write to inform you that I had a bad attack of la grippe last December which lasted more than three months and which left me with catarrh, when several of my friends advised me to try your wonderful medicine, Peruna. I began with a bottle the first week in March and it certainly did me a great deal of good. I was so well satisfied that I purchased another bottle and followed your directions, which you furnish with every bottle, and I am glad to say that it has cured me. I shall certainly recommend the Peruna to all my friends."

GRIP CAUSED NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA.

D. D. Wallace, a charter member of the International Barber's Union writes from 15 Western ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

"Following a severe attack of la grippe I seemed to be affected badly all over. I suffered with a severe backache, indigestion and numerous ills, so I could neither eat nor sleep, and I thought I would give up my work, which I could not afford to do.

"One of my customers who was greatly helped by Peruna advised me to try it, and I procured a bottle the same day. I used it faithfully and felt a marked improvement. During the next two months I took five bottles, and then felt splendid. Now my head is clear, my nerves are steady, I enjoy food, and rest well. Peruna has been worth a dollar a dose to me."—D. L. Wallace.

Washington, April 24, 1900.
The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Frances M. Anderson.

Gentlemen—"About two months ago I was taken very very ill with la grippe and was obliged to go to bed. I took three bottles of Peruna with very beneficial results and was able to leave my my bed in a week, and regained my usual strength very soon. I have nothing but the highest praise for Peruna and recommend it to those similarly afflicted wherever I can."—Frances M. Anderson.

Grip Poisoned Her Blood.

Mrs. T. W. Collins, Treasurer of the Independent Order of Good Templars of Everett, Wash., writes:

"After having a severe attack of la grippe I continued in a feeble condition even after the doctor called me cured. My blood seemed poisoned.

"I also suffered with dyspepsia, and had either to starve or suffer from what I was eating. A neighbor who was using Peruna praised it so highly that she induced me to try it, and I soon found this was what I really needed.

"I could soon eat my regular meals with relish, my system was built up, my health returned, and I have remained in excellent strength and vigor now for over two years."—Mrs. T. W. Collins.

Miss Alice Dressler, of 1313 N. Bryant ave., Minneapolis, Minn., writes as follows concerning Peruna:

"Last spring I suffered from la grippe and was partially cured, but the bad after-effects remained through the summer and somehow I did not get as strong as I was before.

"In the fall I caught cold after getting my feet wet and attending a lecture in a cold hall, and suffered a relapse. Catarrh of the throat and head followed, and as I was in a weak condition physically previous to this, it took but little to break me down completely. One of my college friends, who was visiting me, asked me to try Peruna and I did so and found it all and more than I had expected. It not only cured me of the catarrh, but restored me to perfect health."—Alice Dressler.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

FARMING IN WESTERN CANADA.

What Has Been Done by Premier Greenway, Himself a Leading Farmer.

Hon. Thomas Greenway, Premier of the Province of Manitoba, one of the foremost farmers of Western Canada, writes an excellent article to the press, from which the following extracts are made:

The writer came to Manitoba from Ontario in the autumn of 1878, and has ever since been engaged in agricultural pursuits. From the day, nearly twenty-two years ago, when he selected his homestead, he has had unbounded faith in the country as a place where farming can be successfully carried on, if pursued upon proper lines. There is a large number in this province who should rather be called "wheat-growers" than farmers. On account of the facilities, natural advantages, and therefore cheapness with which wheat can be grown, no doubt many have done exceedingly well by raising wheat only; still, it is far from ideal farming. Not only will such a course, if persisted in, have the effect of causing the land to run out, as has been the experience of those who pursued the same plan in the wheat-producing prairie States to the south of us, but it is far from being the most profitable course to adopt.

This fact is already being demonstrated in Manitoba. Let the farms in this Western country be managed upon the lines which were successful in the Eastern Provinces, and much more can be done here in a given time than was ever done in the East. The probabilities of failure are practically nil. Upon the farm there should be found horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and poultry, according to the ability of the farmer, with respect to his means and the extent of his holding. The wanton waste which has hitherto been practiced by many farmers, that of burning vast quantities of excellent fodder after threshing is done, should cease; it should all be used upon the farm and converted into the old, sensible kind of fertilizer manure, and afterwards be returned to the soil, so that what has been taken from it by the crop may be restored. Although admitting that the great natural fertility of the soil in Manitoba and the success that has attended the growing of wheat after wheat for years upon the same land have a tendency to make such a course as the one mentioned tempting, yet, if continued, wheat growing upon the same land year after year is undoubtedly a mistake.

The writer knows of no country that offers advantages so great to the agriculturist as does Manitoba. The various branches of farming can be carried on successfully, as twenty-two years of practical operations and observations of what others are doing have proven. To those desiring to make new homes for themselves, the low price of some of the best lands in the world (although rapidly advancing in price this year) offers still great opportunities. To all such the invitation is cordially given to "Come and see." There need be no poor people here. There is land for all who choose to come, land upon which happy homes can be established, and from which ample resources can be gathered against old age. All that a man needs to achieve competence in this domain is common sense and industry. With these qualifications he is bound to succeed.

WITH THE LAWMAKERS

Doings In the State Legislature.

In the House.

St. Paul, March 11.—A strong fight was put up in the house Saturday to wipe out the corrupt practices act. A bill was before the house providing for the repeal of the act. After a lively, and at times spirited, debate it was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 49 to 42.

A state board of appeals to pass upon the grain and warehouse appeals is proposed in a bill introduced by Representative Wilder. The board is to be appointed by the grain and warehouse commission and its members, six in number, to hold office for two years.

A bill for the enlargement of the state forestry reserves and the application of the profits accruing therefrom to state, county and town purposes was introduced by Representative Bush of Olmsted.

Senator Smith's bill providing for a state loan of $75,000 to farmers for the purchase of seed grain was passed under suspension of the rules.

In the Senate.

Senator Ryder introduced a bill requiring cities, towns and villages to care for sick and disabled paupers, furnish them medical aid and board, and in case they die, provide for their burial. The cost becomes a legal claim against the county, and from the county against the city or town where the pauper resided.

Corporations or companies not strictly savings banks are restrained from accepting deposits by a bill from Senator J. D. Jones, prepared by the public examiner. It is aimed at so-called tontine savings associations and diamond companies.

Senator Hawkins introduced a bill to limit the public deposits in banks to the amount of the assessed valuation of their capital stock, the figures of the tax roll to govern.

Fourteen bills were sent to the calendar from general orders in the senate in anticipation of a heavy week's work. The calendar was passed on account of the light attendance.

In the House.

St. Paul, March 12.—The Dunn bill for the extension of the direct primary law to all the counties of the state and covering all offices but those of the state, villages and townships, was yesterday passed by the house by a vote of 83 to 14.

A strong fight was put up against the bill, principally by the country members. The debate lasted for three hours.

The bill as introduced was framed to cover the nomination of state officers. Mr. Jacobson of Lac qui Parle led the opposition to that clause. An amendment striking it out of the bill was offered and defeated. Mr. Jacobson then moved to indefinitely postpone the bill. The friends of the measure, frightened at what they believed to be defeat of the whole scheme, consented to a reconsideration, and the bill was so amended as to exclude nominations for state offices. The bill as passed provides that on Tuesday, seven weeks before an election at which district, legislative, county or city officers are to be elected, a primary or nominating election shall be held. The primary election day shall also be the first registration day. At least twenty days prior to the primary election day any voter eligible to an office which he seeks may file his name with the county auditor, and if the office be voted for in one county only, by the payment of $10 have his name printed on his party's primary ticket as a candidate for nomination. If he seeks an office voted for in more than one county his name is filed with the secretary of state and the fee is increased to $20. The party tickets are to be uniform in size, printed with black ink on white paper. All persons entitled to registration are entitled to participation in the primary election. The voter after registration before receiving a ballot must declare his political affiliation, and if challenged, must swear that the ticket which he wishes to vote is that of the party whose candidates he generally supported at the last general election. The voting and canvassing is conducted in the manner now prescribed by law.

Representative Sherman S. Smith of Minneapolis introduced in the house a bill fixing the salary of state senators and representatives at $500 per annum, and of the lieutenant governor and speaker of the the house at $750 a year. At present the senators and representatives get $530 for the full session of ninety days, the speaker and president of the senate getting twice that.

A number of bills on the calendar were disposed of.

In the Senate.

The three bill relieving Beltrami county of its present serious financial difficulties were recommended to pass after a fruitless effort on the part of Senator Wilson to make important amendments.

In the Senate.

The senate passed the Greer bill for the improvement of Camp Lakeview.

C. McCarthy, to have counties pay the traveling and other business expenses of county attorneys.

In the House.

St. Paul, March 14.—The board of control bill was before the house yesterday as a special order. Nothing was accomplished beyond the introduction of several amendments, none of which were acted upon. Three hours time was taken up in debate which was at times lively and spirited. Representative Peterson of Minneapolis was the principal opponent of the bill, which he denounced as a scheme to build up a great political machine. Consideration of the bill will be resumed to-day.

The house refused to concur in the senate amendments to the oil inspection bill and it was sent to conference.

A bill was introduced creating a state board of deposit to select banks in which state funds may be deposited.

Representative Whitford introduced a bill for a memorial to congress praying for the partition of the Winnibigoshish, Chippewa, Leech Lake and Cass Lake Indian reservations for national park and sanitarium purposes.

In the House.

St. Paul, March 15.—The house late yesterday afternoon passed the board of control bill, substantially as it was introduced. After the debate, which occupied the attention of the house for two days, was concluded the long list of amendments confronting the bill were voted down in order, almost without exception. The only amendments adopted were those correcting typographical or clerical errors.

Representative Sageng of Pelican Rapids introduced a bill for the submission to the people of a constitutional amendment providing for direct legislation. He also introduced a bill making it a misdemeanor for physicians or surgeons to administer medicines or perform operations when under the influence of liquor.

Representative Alley is the author of a bill authorizing village councils to order sidewalk or street construction and repairs.

In the Senate.

Senator Coller has secured the passage of a bill in the senate fixing the salaries of judges of probate throughout the state on a basis of population. The amounts paid range from $300 to $2,000 on a sliding scale.

Senator E. E. Smith has introduced a bill providing for state employment offices in each of the three large cities.

The drainage commission bill passed by the house was recommended for passage in the senate after a sharp contest.

PLANKINTON BANK CASES.

Depositors Secured a Verdict and Case Goes to Supreme Court.

Mitchell, S. D., March 16. — The Plankinton bank, which went to the wall a year ago by reason of the defaulting of Fred Stevens, had its first trial at the present term of court. Suit was brought against the bank, which has been adjudged a partnership by the federal court on its application to go into bankruptcy, by forty depositors, who assigned their claims to Wayne Mayson. At the conclusion of the case Judge Smith directed the jury to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $10,000, which was done. There are other cases of a similar nature pending against the bank. The case will be carried to the supreme court.

COUNTERFEITING ALLEGED.

La Crosse, Wis., March 16.—Deputy United States Marshal Lovering made an important catch in Fillmore county, Minn. A number of counterfeit coins have made their appearance in that vicinity recently and yesterday Emile Sandile of Arendahl, a Norwegian about twenty-five years of age, was arrested and charged with the crime. A complete set of counterfeiter's tools was found in his possession, as well as some of the spurious coins. The prisoner was arraigned before Court Commissioner Harrison in the federal court and waived a preliminary examination and was bound over to the grand jury under $500 bonds.

Speaker Corbett Dead.

Helena, Mont., March 16.—Frank E Corbett, speaker of the house of representatives, died in Butte yesterday of pneumonia, aged thirty-seven years. He was a graduate of the law school of the University of Virginia, his native state. For ten years he has been attorney for W. A. Clark. He was formerly president of the state bar association.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

House Seems to Be in No Hurry to End the Session.

St. Paul, March 16.—The senate resolution providing for adjournment April 1 was under discussion for some time in the house yesterday. Considerable opposition manifested itself and the defeat of the resolution was only averted by a proposal to make it a special order for Wednesday, which was agreed to.

Senator Sheehan's bill admitting graduates of the St. Paul college of law to the bar without examination or fees was passed.

FIRE'S QUICK WORK.

Three Lives Sacrificed and Much Damage Done.

Boston, March 17.—Three lives sacrificed, nearly a dozen more or less injured and many thousands of dollars damage is the result of a fire in the Daily Advertiser and Record seven-story granite front building in Newspaper Row last night.

How the fire started is not known, but it was first seen in the pressroom, and it spread to the elevator well and darted to the top so rapidly that before the occupants of the two upper floors were aware the building was on fire their rooms were filled with flames and smoke.

In the editorial rooms on the sixth floor there were but five men. All had to run for their lives. On the upper floor, occupied by the composing room, were eighteen compositors and proofreaders, whose situation was most critical. Panic-stricken, they rushed for the windows leading to the fire escapes and all but three of them succeeded in gaining the roof of an adjoining building. Long ladders were raised as quickly as the network of electric wires over the street would permit, but before a ladder could be placed in position the men had dropped through a skylight in the building roof and had reached places of safety. Except in the pressroom in the basement there was practically no fire in the building below the fifth story. No one was in the pressroom at the time the fire started except the firemen, who had not been seen up to a late hour.

It took three hours of work to drown out the fire. The three victims, all proofreaders, were suffocated before they had time to reach the fire escapes. Those who found the bodies were obliged to jump several feet to the roof of the adjoining building and in this way quite a number of them sustained injuries.

As soon as it was seen that the resources of the Advertiser and Record for issuing the editions of their papers regularly were destroyed, offers of assistance were received from the proprietors of all the other newspapers in the city. Managing Editor Underwood says that it is impossible to estimate the loss until the actual damage to the presses is ascertained.

CARNEGIE BREAKS HIS RECORD.

Will Give New York $5,200,000 for Branch Libraries.

New York, March 17—Andrew Carnegie, who, since retiring as an active figure from the steel world, has been able to devote his time exclusively to his other passion, the founding of libraries, has made his departure for Europe this spring memorable by the largest offer of the kind ever advanced. If New York will provide the sites and maintenance he has promised to give $5,200,000 to establish sixty-five branch libraries in this city. The offer was made in a letter to Dr. John S. Billings, director of the New York public library last Tuesday.

GIFT FOR ST. LOUIS.

Carnegie Offers $1,000,000 for a Public Library.

St. Louis, March 17.—Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire steel magnate, has offered to donate $1,000,000 for the building of a new public library in St. Louis. The offer is similar to many others which Mr. Carnegie has made to cities throughout the United States and abroad.

Damage From Canker Worm.

Fargo, N. D., March 17.—Last year the shade trees suffered in North Dakota from the ravages of the canker worm. To forestall damage this year the agricultural college is issuing a bulletin telling how to prevent damage. The article is short and concise and will do much toward saving the trees in the cities.

Bonds for Schoolhouse.

Sioux City, Iowa, March 17.—At the school election at Eagle Grove, Iowa, it was decided to issue bonds for $20,000 to erect a high school building. All of the women who voted were in favor of the school except three.

LIKE A MAGIC LAMP

New Mineral that Emits Perpetual Light.

That the alchemist's dream of a magic lamp which never goes out will shortly be realized is indicated by some remarkable experiments lately made by Washington scientists, says a capital correspondent in the New York Times. Some months ago Secretary Langley of the Smithsonian institution received from Europe a mysterious little box, which he took to the dark room of his astro-physical observatory, and there opened in the presence of several savants invited to inspect the valuable contents. The removal of the lid revealed two small cylinders of strawboard aglow from what appeared to be fire, hidden within. Inside these wrappings were discovered two hermetically sealed phials—about the size of your little finger—from which issued an unceasing greenish-white light, which gave the surrounding packages a peculiar glow, like that from X rays. These phials had remained hidden from light at least two months before they had been opened. Brought to the light, one was seen to contain a white, starch-like powder, finely pulverized; the other a similar substance, broken up into little cubes about a tenth of an inch in dimension. Returned to the darkness both bodies continued to glow sufficiently bright for a page, held nearly, to be easily read thereby. Yet the glass of the containing bottles was cold. Asked what the mysterious phials contained, the admiring scientists explained that the precious substance was "radium," a mineral lately discovered by Mme. Sklodowska Curie, a Polish chemist, studying in Paris. Mme. Curie found radium to be contained, as a supposed impurity, in the salts of another mineral known as uranium. Chemists have thrown it away for years, never dreaming that it was destined to become one of the most valuable minerals known to science. Radium, with its mysterious source of light, emits two distinct sets of raps; one like those of ordinary daylight; the other like X rays. T. W. Smillie, in charge of the Smithsonian's photographic department, was given for examination the two phials of radium, each containing about a dram of the powder. He took them to his dark room and there made a series of interesting experiments, which demonstrated that the substance possesses the two sources of light to a marvelous degree. Radium costs no less than $1,000 an ounce. Its great expense is due to its present scarcity. As soon as chemists learn how to extract it readily it will grow much cheaper. Moreover, only a small percentage of it contains the mysterious luminous element. When the raw material can be more cheaply obtained and more completely concentrated it will certainly become a much sought commercial article. Geologists will meanwhile locate the earth's deposits of uranium, the crude material from which radium is extracted. It can probably be found in sufficient quantities to supply any reasonable demand. A half ton of the residues of uranium minerals now produces only a little more than two pounds of the radiant powder. But this loss is due to the fact that no one yet knows how to extract radium economically. Radium will revolutionize all lighting methods when cheaply produced. If a mere dram of the crude powder will show such power as Mr. Smillie observed, a hundred pounds of the refined materials will doubtless work marvels. Mr. Smillie estimated that a half pound of the powder will light an ordinary room. This it will do if thinly spread out. Like a magnet, radium retains its energy indefinitely. It will give off light for years without showing any loss. Mr. Smillie says he has reason to hope that the discovery of radium may result in the perfection of a luminous paint of a lasting quality. The householder of the future will coat the ceiling or walls of his rooms with luminous paint made from radium and will thus light his home without resort to lamps, gas jets, or electric lights. To darken such a room it will be necessary to merely draw a light-proof screen across the illuminated surface. But at its present price the half pound mentioned as sufficient to light an ordinary room would cost $8,000. Yet, if such a supply would last a million years, a single lamp, even at this price, would shine upon thousands of generations, and would more than pay for itself in saving gas, oil, and electric light bills. When radium can be found in abundance it will undoubtedly afford man his cheapest light—a light which will never fail.

Fired by Petroleum Sprays.

Petroleum sprays are used on one of the western lines for lighting the fires of locomotives. The reservoir for the oil is mounted on wheels. Compressed air is used to spray the oil. The air can be taken from any Westinghouse receiver or pump. In using the apparatus, the bed of coal is first placed on the grate, and then the jet spray is ignited and directed on to the coal, being moved over the surface until the whole is ignited, which usually requires about fifteen minutes.

According to the rabbis, Solomon had a beard three feet long. Among the Jews the beard was considered synonymous with wisdom; the longer the beard, the greater the profundity of intellect.

HIS REPUTATION CAPSIZED.

Sir William White Deposed Because Royal Yacht Proved Cranky.

Information has come to the naval intelligence office that England's most famous ship designer, after years of conspicuous service, covering a period of greatest naval development, has been removed from office because of some mistakes made by his subordinates, which have caused much discussion both in naval circles and the royal family in the last six months. Battle ships, armored cruisers, fleet torpedo boats and other types of war ships had been successfully designed and constructed under his direction, and no serious fault or flaw discovered in any of them could be attributed to poor design. Probably no naval architect was more widely known that Sir William White, the British chief constructor, an official with high rank and large pay; but in the latter part of his career troubles came upon him in the simple design of a royal yacht. Several months ago the $1,000,000 yacht built for the queen capsized at her dock because of want of proper distribution of weights, and calculations made showed that gross carelessness had been displayed in her design, which resulted in her being topheavy and altogether unsafe. British officials were shocked that such an accident could occur to a vessel built for royal persons, and all the blame was at once placed on the chief constructor. He was held responsible for the lack of proper attention being given the plans that led to a vessel being built that would turn over alongside her pier, especially in the case of a ship that should be more seaworthy and safe than, perhaps, any other built for service. The injuries to the yacht received in capsizing rendered her unfit for further consideration. Sir William was at once detached from service, and recently it has been decided to place some one else at the head of the construction department. In the British service the construction corps has already been antagonized by the line contingent, and while seniority in promotion is recognized the chief constructor is usually taken from civil life, and has come, in the past, from some of the great shipbuilding yards of the country. Mr. Watts, one of the famous designers of the Armstrongs, has been tendered the office of chief constructor, and will probably be the successor to Sir William. Mr. Watts' present salary is said to be much larger than he would receive in the construction corps of the British navy, but the honor attached to the position is one that few naval architects would be willing to decline. A new yacht is now being built on plans that will insure safety under all conditions. Sir William White will receive a pension and retire from service.—Boston Herald.

Fortune in a Tool Chest.

Frederick Fancher, who lives in Kansas City, has fallen heir to a fortune found in the bottom of the old-fashioned tool chest of his father, Edwin Fancher, a resident of Unadilla, N. Y. The father had lived alone in Unadilla for several years. He was a carpenter and apparently had all he could do to support himself. His death came suddenly, and when neighbors after the funeral, looked over his effects they could find only a few pieces of furniture and his tool chest. This was looked into; but later, one man more inquisitive than the others examined the bottom of the chest, and was surprised to find a false bottom, under which were bank notes, gold and securities aggregating $50,000. A search for his heirs was begun at once, the money being turned over to the authorities. Fred was located in Kansas City and notified of his good luck. He is now in Unadilla, and will take charge of his father's effects. It is thought that further deposits may be found in some of the furniture. Fancher is supposed to have made his money by lucky investments.

Swindling Advertisement in France.

Not long ago a notice appeared in one of the French papers to the effect that the United States government would pay $10,000 as a dowry to every white man who would marry an Indian wife and that a tract of good land would be thrown in. The bait was tempting and now the interior department has the task before it of informing these amorous, but of course, unmercenary Gauls that they have been fooled.

Now In Its Third Tomb.

Within the precincts of Mount Vernon, the beautiful estate once occupied by George Washington, and now preserved by the nation in his memory, are three spots where the first president has been buried. The tomb which is now pointed out to visitors as containing the remains of Washington is not that in which his body was laid on the date of his burial, Dec. 18, 1799. Twice since then the coffin has been moved, but never away from Mount Vernon.

SCALDS TRAIN ROBBERS.

Colorado Road Uses Automatic Device to Discourage Bold Bandits.

The Rio Grande railroad in Colorado, has equipped its locomotives with a novel train robber killing device. It is a means of playing scalding water and steam over the bandits. There is an extra piece of steel pipe running up from the bottom of the boiler to the back of the engine cab, where it is flattened out fan-shaped, the angle of the fan embracing the front, top and sides of the blind baggage and express. Another device of practically the same kind covers the front, top and sides of the locomotive itself. Other engines have a steam pipe and hose just back of the engineer, where it is handy to grab quickly. Down near the floor of the cab in several places, where they can be reached easily, are little innocent looking buttons that connect with an air valve to the steam pipe. In less time than it takes to tell it, the engineer or fireman can touch a button and send back over the coal pile in the tender the hottest jet of water that any robber ever saw. The boilers carry a pressure of about 225 pounds, so the water near the bottom of the crown sheet will be at least at the boiling point. The amount of execution one of the "cookers," as they are called, can do in a few seconds is frightful. Should four or six robbers get on the front or top of the blind baggage and make a hostile demonstration toward the engineer they can be disposed of quickly. A slight stream will make it so hot in the neighborhood that they will be glad to get off. At the same time it will fill the air with steam, so that shooting at the engineer or fireman will be out of the question. It will be impossible to tell the direction, except the way to jump. Only once since their installation have the new machines been put to test, and that was several weeks ago in the Grand canyon, when several tramps threatened to take charge of a freight train and bully the crew into submission to their wishes. They got the conductor and brakeman "buffaloed" back about a dozen car lengths, and then started toward the engineer to make him "dig up" some coin. But the fireman had seen the whole performance and tipped off the affair to the engineer, who turned on a small stream and slowed up to see the fun. The white mist had no sooner struck the hoboes than they made a dive off the tops of the cars. The two fellows with guns who were back with the conductor and brakeman, worked their way ahead to see what caused all the excitement, when they got a few stray splashes of hot water in the face and also jumped.

Odd Wares From Manila.

The acquisition of the Philippines has begun to familiarize the American public with many of the odd wares and merchandise which are found in that archipelago, says the New York Evening Post. No part of this world is richer in shells, especially of the pearl and mother of pearl variety. For centuries there has been a steady flow of the latter to China, where they are used in enormous quantities for household decorations. Outside of these shells are others almost as useful. One variety, a sea couch, is cut through obliquely and according to the angle of the saw the resulting segment is a spoon, a ladle, a saucer, plate, cup, or bowl. After cutting they are cleaned and polished, making a handsome object. It looks like colored porcelain, but is far tougher and stronger. A shell spoon or bowl can be dropped without danger of breaking and will withstand hot water and cold as well as wood. Another variety of shell is employed for buttons. The turbinates are the favorites. They range through a hundred colors and patterns and take a very high gloss. When cut by the natives beauty of surface rather than of outline appears to be the main object. The most popular shape is oblong. Next to this is an oval, and then follow such figures as the rounded triangle, which with eyelets are retailed in Manila for five cents.

What Did He Mean?

The late Charles Spurgeon was fond of recording the following incident: While he was leaving the tabernacle after a sermon one Sunday a man approached him and, addressing him by name, shook his hand warmly. "I see," said he, "that you have forgotten me, sir; and yet you once did me the greatest service that one man can do another." "And what service was that?" asked Spurgeon. "You buried my wife, sir," responded the stranger, his eyes suffused with tears.

Late Queen Victoria's Religion.

Queen Victoria was profoundly religious. She believed in the efficacy of prayer. She was a regular Bible reader, and frequently used a well-worn Bible that belonged to General Gordon, and was presented by his sister to the queen, who acknowledged the gift in an autograph letter. At the same time she did not permit her religious convictions to influence the subtle intricacies of statecraft.—Chicago Record.

Landlord System in the South.

Aid is being sought in the north in furtherance of a plan to assist the negroes in many places in the black belt of the south to become land owners, thus freeing them from the bondage of the landlord system, under which too often, the tenant does not receive a just share of the product resulting from his efforts.

The city authorities of Vienna have condemned the use of trailing skirts in public places, on hygienic grounds, because they sweep up the dust.

RUSSIA LOOSENS UP

MODIFICATIONS IN THE MANCHURIAN CONVENTION.

Russia Consents to Certain Changes Which Will Make the Government of the Province Something of a Dual Affair for Russians and Chinese — Chinese Army Will Maintain Order—Russia Demands Early Signature — Russians Retake the Railroad Siding.

Pekin, March 26. — It is understood here that the Russian government has consented to the following modifications in the Manchurian convention:

First, that Kinchow and Port Arthur shall not be annexed, but shall be leased from the Chinese government as heretofore; second, that Russia will not insist upon there being a Russian resident at Loukden; third, the Chinese army will be permitted to maintain order in Manchuria prior to the completion of the Manchurian railway, which, while in course of construction, will not necessarily require the protection of Russian troops; and, fourth, that Russia will forego her demand that mining and railway concessions in Magnolia, Turkestan and Kashgaria shall be granted to none but Russian subjects. Russia stipulates, however, that none but Chinese and Russians shall be allowed to undertake such enterprises.

In consequence of these concessions the Russian government insists upon the early signature of the convention. The Chinese minister at St. Petersburg thinks that the modifications are satisfactory, but the advisors of the court still refuse to recommend the ratification of the convention. Viceroy Lui Kun Yi likewise strongly protests against reaffirmation. Li Hung Chang says that the responsibility for signing rests with the Chinese minister at St. Petersburg. The Russians continue to threaten to bring troops if China fails to comply with the demands.

Russians Retake Siding.

London, March 26.—The Sunday Special's Tien-tsin correspondent says: "A new and unfortunate hitch has occurred in the Anglo-Russian siding dispute. After both parties had withdrawn, according to agreement, the Russians suddenly returned to the disputed spot and planted flags over the territory. They afterward again retired, leaving the flags flying."

TOLSTOI DISGUSTED.

It Is Reported That He Contemplates Leaving Russia Forever.

London, March 26.—Count Tolstoi is reported to be making preparations for quitting Russia forever in disgust and despair. His English friends are urging him to settle in this country, it is said. The report is scarcely credible, but it comes from a quarter that justifies its mention. The latest direct advices from the great writer indicate that while he is justly indignant at the monstrous action of the Orthodox church bigots in procuring his excommunication and not without apprehension that that action foreshadowed political persecution, he entertained not the shadow of a doubt that all considerations of personal dignity and devotion to duty required that he should remain at his post. He feels that expatriation would seriously diminish his opportunities and power for usefulness to this country.

ORATORICAL DISPUTE.

Northern League Torn Up Over the Presidency.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 26.—A row is liable to occur in the Northern Oratorical league. The president of the league is a University of Wisconsin man, but he had resigned and the students elected another of their number in his place. Mr. Stanley, the vice president, is a University of Michigan man, and he has been directed to go to the meeting of the league at Iowa City in May and demand his rights to preside over the meeting.

Attempted Suicide.

Chicago, March 26.—George J. Smith, of the George J. Smith Boiler Manufacturing company, shot himself yesterday at his home in Chicago Heights. The ball entered his abdomen and came out under the left arm. He was unconscious when found by members of his family, and the surgeon in attendance states that the chances are against his recovery. Mr. Smith, who is sixty years old, was formerly engaged in business in St. Louis. He had of late been in ill health and worried over business troubles.

Boy Charged With Murder.

Louisville, Ky., March 26. — Eddie Hoffman, a small boy, was arrested last night on the charge of murdering another boy named Samuel Callahan by beating him with his fists. Hoffman said Callahan made some remarks about Hoffman's sister when she passed a crowd of boys, and "I just mugged him." The incident occurred at 5 p. m. and Callahan dith at 10:30 at a hospital.

Rather Exciting Experience.

Red Wing, Minn., March 26.—W. C. Hawkins was caught by the end of a piece of shafting in the Model laundry which stripped every stitch but his shoes and socks and a wisp of his shirt with his necktie. He was not seriously hurt.

Kruger May Come.

London, March 26.—The Geneva correspondent of the Daily Mail says it is reported there that Mr. Kruger, if his health permits, will visit the United States next month.

UNCLE SAM'S BILL IN CHINA.

Twenty-five Million Dollars Will About Cover It.

Washington, March 22.—At the request of Secretary Hay, statements of the cost of transporting the American forces to and from China and their maintenance in that country have been submitted to him by the secretaries of war and navy to enable him to determine the amount of pecuniary indemnity to be demanded from China on account of the recent troubles. For the same purpose statements have been submitted to Mr. Hay of the number of officers and men of the American forces killed and wounded, it being the intention to compel China to pay for these losses, the money probably to be given to the families of the killed and to the men incapacitated by their wounds for active service. A rough guess of the aggregate of the American claims is placed at $25,000,000. This will include what are called national indemnities, or damages for the affront given to the United States by the assaults of imperial troops on United States officials and those in their care.

SMUGGLING BY WHOLESALE.

Treasury Officials Dumbfounded by Disclosures in New York.

Washington, March 22.—Collector of Customs Bidwell of New York was in the city yesterday conferring with Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Spaulding regarding the reorganized conditions at the New York customs house. He brought figures to show that the duties collected from passengers on four steamers arriving last Thursday, Friday and Saturday were $22,000 greater than from passengers aboard steamers of the same lines on corresponding days last year. The extent of the smuggling disclosed by the new system in New York has almost dumbfounded the treasury officials, and steps are being taken to apply the New York system, as far as practicable to other ports of entry.

CRUSADE AGAINST CRAP GAMES.

Colored Lady Adopts Mrs. Nation's Methods.

Chicago, March 22. — Adopting the smashing methods of Carrie Nation, Mrs. Lottie Jones, colored, went forth on the South side to wield an axe in a crusade against crap games and policy shops. She began her work by wrecking a coal office at 2251 Dearborn street, where she found her husband engaged in a game of craps. When she had smashed the windows and reduced the furniture in the coal office to kindling wood she shouldered her axe and started in search of a policy shop where her husband had been losing money. When she reached the policy shop, however, she found it closed. Disappointed, she went home. Mrs. Jones says she will go out to-day and smash every place where her husband is accustomed to gamble.

WIFE SOLD TO SHAME.

Toledo, Ohio, March 22.—The police arrested Manuel Schneiderman, a barber, who is wanted in New York on the charge of abduction. Three months ago Schneiderman married a seventeen-year-old girl, then practically sold her and placed her in a house of infamy. After he had placed the girl in the house he called weekly and forced her to turn over all her money. The girl finally escaped from the house and told her story to the committee of fifteen. At this time Schneiderman left the city. The proprietress of the house was sent to prison for a year. Schneiderman has been working in a barber shop here for several weeks. The police say that there is no doubt but that he is the man wanted.

ROMANCE OF PEKIN.

Niece of Minister Conger to Marry Lieut. Harold Hammond.

New York, March 22.—The announcement is made through advices from Pekin, China, that Miss Mary Conger Pierce, niece of Minister E. H. Conger, is to marry Lieut. Harold Hammond, of the Ninth infantry. Mr. Hammond's home is at Rushville, Ill. He is a graduate of West Point. Miss Pierce is an orphan and has been a member of the Conger household for some years. The young people met when the Ninth infantry reached Pekin as the first body of American troops to come to the relief of that city. Little time was lost in wooing, and the betrothal was announced before the departure of Mr. Conger at a dinner to which nineteen officers of the regiment were invited.

WOLCOTT IN THE CABINET.

Report That He Will Succeed Secretary Hitchcock.

Pueblo, Colo., March 22.—The Daily Chieftain says: It is definitely known here that ex-Senator Edward O. Wolcott of Colorado will in a few days be appointed by the president to be secretary of the interior to succeed Ethan A. Hitchcock of Missouri. The news has been received by a friend of Mr. Wolcott in this city, the statement being made unequivocally, indicating that the announcement will be made in Washington to-day.

BIG SALT PLANT.

Pennsylvania Company Will Build Near Wyandotte, Mich.

Detroit, Mich., March 22.—Austin M. Purvis, secretary, treasurer and manager of the Pennsylvania Salt company, has made arrangements for erecting a salt, soda ash and chemical plant near Wyandotte. The section of the plant which it is proposed to build this year will cost from $1,600,000 to $2,000,000, and it is expected to have it finished within six months.

A RIVER OF FLAMES

BURNING OIL SWEEPS DOWN ON A SLEEPING VILLAGE.

Many Buildings Destroyed by Fire and Inhabitants Compelled to Flee for Their Lives Before the Oncoming Flood of Blazing Oil—Fire Most Peculiar in Character and Origin—Wrecked Cars of Oil Catch Fire and the Burning Oil Flows Down Upon the Village.

New York, March 26. — A river of flaming oil swept down upon the little village of Glen Gardner, N. J., while its inhabitants were asleep yesterday morning and reduced eleven buildings, stores and residences, to ashes. The conflagration was noteworthy in character and it its origin. The village was on the line of the Jersey Central railway. An immense freight train was coming east at 6:30 a. m. It was composed of a string of cars and eighteen tank cars. High above the village the tracks of the railway run along the side of the mountain. They decline as they approach the village, but even at the station are completely above the level of the street, which runs to the depot up a steep incline. A few miles west of the village while coming down the incline around the mountain the train parted. The engineer on the forward part pulled open the throttle of the engine and tried to race away from the second section which was increasing its speed every moment. He managed to keep clear of the runaway cars until he got opposite the depot, when the second section smashed into the first. The first section, composed of coal cars, was goind at a high rate of speed and none of its cars were jolted off the track. The forward car of the runaway section, one of the oil tanks, was hurled on its side across the track and the oil cars were piled on top of it in every way. The first crash caused the oil in one of the tanks to ignite and caused the tanks to explode one after another. The incline running from the depot down to the main street formed a sluice for the burning oil and it poured into the chief thoroughfare of the village, setting fire to everything it touched. Houses, fences, trees, shrubbery and barns were reduced to ashes in an incredibly short time. Villagers awakened by the explosions rushed from the oncoming flood of blazing oil carrying children in their arms. Some risked their lives to free horses, cows and dogs in outbuildings, but other unfortunate animals could not be reached in time and were burned. Within five minutes after the first explosion the flowing river of oil had reached the Masonic temple in the heart of the village and ten minutes later that structure was enveloped in flames. Then building after building, all of them frame, took fire as the oil reached them, and within half an hour an area 500 feet square was a mass of flames. From the wrecked cars the oil also flowed down the incline of the railway track, making a long line of fire that destroyed the ties and bet and twisted the tracks. The loss is estimated at from $60,000 to $75,000.

WANTED FOR KIDNAPPING.

Mobile, Ala., March 26. — W. H. Stevens, aged fifty-five and a prominent merchant of Lucedale, Miss., is being searched for by the authorities of several counties on the charge of kidnapping. Stevens is charged with having kidnapped the thirteen-year-old daughter of B. M. Stearns of Lucedale. It is charged that Stevens boarded with the family and on Wednesday took the girl to Mobile. With them was J. A. Freeman, who was arrested on the charge of assisting in the affair. Freeman says Stevens and the girl intended to get married, but up to Saturday night the ceremony had not been performed so far as is known in Mobile. The local officers went to the place where Stevens and the girl had been stopping, but they had left. The father of the girl and a number of friends are assisting in the search for her and Stevens.

KILLED HIS BROTHER.

Alexandria, Ind., March 26.—William and James Gilmore, colored, brothers, who, with their wives, occupy the same house, quarreled yesterday over a trivial matter, when James struck his brother, who drew a revolver and fired two shots at him with fatal effect. The first shot grazed the wrist of Henry Campbell, who tried to separate them, and inflicted a flesh wound upon the abdomen of James Gilmore. William then fired the second shot at his brother who had turned to make his escape. The shot entered the left shoulder from the rear and penetrated the lungs. Gilmore died in an hour. His brother disappeared but was afterward captured and lodged in jail.

Injured by a Fall.

Boston, March 26. — Edward W. Hooper, a former treasurer of Harvard college and a lawyer in this city, fell from the third story of his residence on Beacon street shortly after midnight and received serious, though, it is believed, not fatal injuries. Mr. Hooper has been confined to his room for ten days with illness brought on by overwork, and he has been in charge of a trained nurse. The accident occurred when the latter was temporarily absent from the room and no one witnesed it.

MRS. H. P. ROBINSON ALIVE.

Report That She Was Dead in New York Due to Mistake.

Baltimore, Md., March 26.—Mrs. Harry P. Robinson, now living at the Altamont hotel in this city, was much shocked by a report circulated in New York that she was dead. A telephone message from the Holland house in New York was received at the Altamont asking whether Mrs. Robinson was dead. She replied that she was alive and in good health. Upon inquiry she ascertained that she had been confounded with a woman who died in New York, and whose last name was said to be Robinson. Mrs. Robinson is the daughter of Thomas Lowry of Minneapolis, and she said that she understood a telegram had been sent to him saying she had committed suicide. Mrs. Robinson stated that she had immediately telegraphed her father that she was alive and well. Mrs. Robinson stated that when in New York she stopped at the Holland house.

HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

Their Boundary Dispute to Be Submitted to Arbitration.

Kingston, Jam., March 26.—Reliable information has been received here to the effect that the recent boundary dispute between Haiti and Santo Domingo, which was reported to have threatened hostilities, was suspended on condition that the matter be submitted to arbitration. The dispute dates from an attempt to divert the course of a river marking the boundary between the two countries. In deference to public opinion the government has revised the tax valuation to make all cultivated lands bear the same proportionate taxation as the United Fruit company.

HOME FOR ADMIRAL SCHLEY.

Nearly Half of Required Sum Already Contributed by Citizens.

Washington, March 26.—At a meeting of the committee appointed at a mass meeting of citizens of Washington for the purpose of presenting Admiral Schley with a modest home, held in this city, it was reported that about $6,000 had been contributed to the fund. It is expected that by April 15, $15,000 will have been raised, and this will be used to purchase a home in the suburbs of Washington to be presented to the admiral on his arrival in this country about April 15.

BOERS ATTACK BRITISH.

Raid Supply Train and Get Away With Provisions.

Standerton, Transvaal, March 26. — Four hundred Boers under Commander Buys have wrecked a supply train north of Vlaklaagte. They overpowered the escort and carried off several wagon loads of provisions. A convoy designed to join Gen. French's column has been attacked between Blood river and Schepper's Nek. The British had one man killed and three wounded. The bridge at Blood river was burned.

COULDN'T STAND THAT.

TO CAPTURE AGGIE

GEN. FUNSTON UNDERTAKES A DANGEROUS MISSION.

Risks His Life in an Effort to Capture the Leader of the Filipinos—Goes to the Heart of the Enemy's Country With a Small Escort—Company of Trusted Natives Accompanies the Intrepid Kansan—News of Aguinaldo's Capture is Expected Now at Any Time.

Manila, March 26.—The news of the capture of Aguinaldo by Gen. Funston is daily expected. Gen. Funston left Manila two weeks ago at the head of an expedition organized by Gov. Gen. MacArthur for the express purpose of capturing the insurgent leader. The expedition is made up of trusted natives, under command of Gen. Funston, assisted by Capt. John Newton of the Thirty-fourth Volunteer infantry, Lieut. Admire of the Twenty-second infantry, Lieut. Mitchell of the Fortieth volunteers and Surgeon Major Harris.

The expedition was conveyed by the gunboat Vicksburg and the cruiser Albany to a landing place on the east coast of Luzon, north of Baler. From the landing place Funston had a six-days' march inland before reaching Aguinaldo's hiding place. It is believed that the Kansas general has already carried out the details of his plans.

Gen. Funston's present attempt to capture Aguinaldo is the most dangerous of the many daring projects he has undertaken during his dashing career in the Philippines. He is staking his freedom and perhaps his life, for he has gone into the heart of the enemy's country with no other escort than four American officers and a company of Filipinos, upon whose faithfulness his liberty depends.

Insurgents Surrender.

Manila, March 26. — In the province of Cavite four insurgent officers and 53 men with 56 rifles have surrendered to Lieut. Col. Frank D. The attendance at the Evangelical church services in Manila is not diminished. Protestantism is spreading rapidly in the province of Pampanga.

WORK OF A MANIAC.

Horrible Injuries Self-Inflicted by a Woman.

Toledo, Ohio, March 26. — Mrs. G. Brunschneider, residing near the city limits, occupies a ward at St. Vincent's hospital and is in a serious condition as a result of horrible injuries self-inflicted. About 5 o'clock in the evening, armed with an ordinary pair of scissors, she cut off all the toes on her left foot, both her ears close to her head and about an inch of her nose. Then she cut out a portion of her right cheek, inflicted five gashes in the left cheek and finally began on her arms. Beginning at the left forearm she removed every vestige of skin, laying bare the muscles. She also lacerated the right arm in a horrible manner. Nothing was known of the affair until her husband, who was absent during the night, returned home in the morning and found her in bed in a semi-conscious condition. A surgeon was called at once and she was taken to the hospital. Her recovery is doubtful. The woman is about fifty years of age. It is thought that she was temporarily insane on account of domestic troubles.

POPE LEO DISTURBED.

Popular Demonstrations Against the Jesuits the Cause.

Rome, March 26.—The pope has had special inquiries made respecting the policy of action toward the Jesuits throughout the world. He is much disturbed at the simultaneous and apparently spontaneous popular demonstrations against the order in Spain, Portugal, France and Austria, and expressed the opinion that there must be something radically wrong somewhere. It is now announced that the pope is satisfied the trouble is due to mismanagement, and has decided to remove Father Martin, the director general of the Jesuits. Father Martin, it is understood, will be placated by an important post at the Vatican. The new general will be an Italian, who will be more directly amenable to church discipline.

BICYCLE RIDER'S STRANGE END.

Legs of Pennsylvania Man Burst After Overexertion on Old-Fashioned Wheel.

Reading, Pa., March 26.—Jonas Wagner, aged thirty-five, died at Tamaqua of an affliction that puzzles the doctors. Overexertion on the steep hills on an old-fashioned high wheel bicycle caused the calves of both his legs to suddenly swell. In a few hours the skin burst at several places. The swelling continued until the pain was so intense that in a short time he died.

THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN

A St. Louis woman is so delicate that she invariably catches cold every time she drinks water from a damp tumbler.

In the United States there are over 5,000 theaters, and these are located in about 3,500 towns. During the theatrical season there are perhaps 6,000 traveling companies continually on the road.

It will be remembered that Arthur Lawrence published some time ago a volume entitled "The Life Story, Letters and Reminiscences of Sir Arthur Sullivan," written with the composer's authority. He is now at work on a complete biography, which will be entirely rewritten and contain much new matter.

A system of insurance against strikes prevails in Austria. Holders of policies are indemnified if strikes occur in their establishments, whether voluntary, forced, or sympathetic. The cost of a policy is three or four per cent of the annual payroll. The indemnity is fifty per cent of the wages paid for the week preceding the suspension of work.

A colored woman in Atlanta, Ga., has brought suit against a street railroad company for $1,000 damages on account of a peculiar accident. She was seated in a crowded car, when the vehicle suddenly started. A fat man, weighing about two hundred pounds, who was standing, grabbed at a strap, missed it, and fell into the woman's lap, temporarily crushing the breath out of her.

Daniel R. Magruder, an ex-judge of the Maryland court of appeals, is a constable in Annapolis. To the protest of the citizens that constables had not been appointed the board in charge of the matter replied that they could not find men to accept the office. When Judge Magruder stated that plenty of good men could be found it was banteringly suggested by a prominent politician that the judge should accept and he did.

Near Rio Grande City, Texas, an immense deposit of an unknown gaseous substance has been discovered. Pieces of it ignite quickly and give out a strong flame, which lasts for a remarkably long period. It is said by scientists that the substance is either an unknown mineral or ordinary clay highly charged with gas. In either case, the value of the deposit as fuel is immense, as it covers many thousands of acres, and is of immense depth.

Valentine Woodhouse, who has just died at Albury, England, at the great age of 94, was one of the apostles of the "Catholic Apostolic church," established by Edward Irving some 70 months ago, who, it was fondly hoped, would not complete their work before the second advent of Christ. Since the first death took place among this band of 12 in the year 1855, that hope has been gradually failing, and with the death of the sole survivor, the expectation of many that he would be miraculously preserved must now be supplanted by a renewed confession of failure.

"I am no longer young," said an Alaska pioneer the other day, "but I expect to live to see a continuous line of railway from New York to St. Petersburg by way of Bering Strait. In fact, work on one of the connecting links will be begun within a year." The line he referred to will extend from Port Valdes on the sea to the Yukon river at the mouth of the Tanana. From this point another road is projected to Nome, and if that should be built, a railway across the strait to Siberia might become at least a possibility. If expanding trade should demand such a road, neither the engineering nor the financial difficulties would be insurmountable. It is an interesting thing to speculate about, at any rate.

"I would joyfully, many a time," said a famous singer the other day, "exchange all my public ovations for my mother's knowledge how to prepare a palatable meal." Nevertheless, so fashionable have culinary and household subjects become, that "my mother's pies" have formidable rivals in "my daughter's doughnuts." Even collegiate straws shows which way the wind blows. Themes recently chosen for senior theses in several leading women's colleges include "The Servant Problem," "Household Economics" and "Foods in Relation to Intellect and Sanity," and stand in marked contrast with the poetic and platitudinous graduating essays of only a generation ago. To be "a good housekeeper," said Shakespeare, "goes as fairly as to say . . . a great scholar." Today, as never before, the two accomplishments walk hand in hand.

A large number of junior officers of the French army are to be employed for four months next summer in revising the map of France. The whole work falls into two divisions—the one consisting of the actual revision of the map, the other of the preparation of plans for defense of the frontier. The entire task will be carried out under the superintendence of the permanent staff of the geographical staff, and credit counting toward promotion or for a garde in the Legion of Honor will be given to those officers who send in good work.

IN THE WEB OF A SPIDER............

BY....... LILLIAN GILLIN.

CHAPTER I.

It was evening. The moon had risen and was bathing in its silvery light the stone walls of Grey Oaks, the country residence of Donald Markham, and the show place of the neighborhood.

Within the elegantly-appointed dining room, around a table artistically garnished with fruit and flowers, lingered three persons.

One was Grey Oaks' owner and master—a tall, superb-looking man of sixty-five winters, whose frosts had whitened his hair and beard, but failed to bow his powerful frame.

Twenty years before, the society world, already looking upon Donald Markham as a confirmed old bachelor, had been startled by being summoned to welcome, on his return from an extended foreign tour, a young and beautiful woman of Italian birth, whom he presented to them as his wife.

Who she was, where he had met her, and how she had conquered this hitherto unconquerable, were matters for curious speculation, of which there was no lack.

Some said that she was the daughter of a Roman noble, and that she had brought her husband a dower of almost incredible magnitude; others declared that she was penniless, her only dower her exquisite beauty and winning grace.

Whoever, whatever, Donald Markham's wife may have been before he thus had honored her, as Mrs. Donald Markham, she was too great a local power not to reign as social sovereign had she so ordained. Society's pet grievance was that she did not so ordain.

She adored her husband, and he appeared to lavish all the pent-up flood of years upon her.

For a year their happiness was unmarred, and then, one perfect May morning, the heaviest sorrow of Donald Markham's life fell upon him. They put into his arms an infant daughter, and whispered to him that his wife was dead.

His grief was something terrible in its silent, hopeless intensity. Iron bands seemed at that moment to lock themselves about his heart—would have remained so locked forever but for the tiny fingers of his little girl, who, as the years went by, one by one loosed them.

On her he concentrated all a father's tenderness. No other woman's smile ever allured him. Reticent and grave, his child alone reveled in the inner warmth and sunshine of his nature, until, advancing from babyhood to childhood—from childhood to girlhood—she, now standing on the threshold of womanhood, appeared to him the impersonation and idealization of the past.

The light, streaming full upon her face, revealed no flaw. The figure was rounded into a beauty which defies all criticism. Hers was a face no pen could describe. Her eyes were gray. The straight regularity of the little nose, the rebellious, willful rings of ruddy gold upon her white brow—this until she smiled; and then you would have sworn it was the smile to which she owed her rarest charm.

Yet now, sitting opposite to her father and toying with, rather than eating, the bunch of hot-house grapes upon her plate, the lashes were sweeping her cheeks, the drooping head half-shadowed its bloom. The smile was absent, indeed, a tiny frown puckered her brow; but the beauty still was there, and on it gloated the eyes of the third member of the party.

Randolph Chester was the nearest relative Donald Markham could boast, but it was difficult to believe even a remote tie of blood connected two men whose expression rendered them so dissimilar.

The face of the younger man was at once singularly handsome and singularly repellant. One recognized in him the fascination possessed by the serpent.

His eyes were dark and glittering; his hair and mustache black; his skin fair as a woman's. There was subtle grace in every movement. His voice was low and musical.

At the time of his cousin's marriage, twenty years before, he had been a boy of fourteen, and already looked upon himself as Donald Markham's presumptive heir.

For years he had nourished a deadly hatred against this innocent destroyer of his fond vision; but, as the child developed into the most perfect womanhood, a new idea had burst upon him, by which his early disappointment might yet be wiped out, and his early ambition attained.

Over Donald Markham he already exercised a strong and peculiar influence that influence he fostered by every care, until he knew that to no man would his cousin more willingly intrust his most precious treasure than himself.

But an unexpected obstacle lay in his path. It was one thing to woo Beatrice Markham—another to win her; and the girl usually so sweet, so gracious to all, took no pains to disguise toward him her aversion and—she was in love with another.

Bertram Talbot, holding a salaried position in his cousin's employ, aspired to the hand of his cousin's heiress. It was he who had caused Donald Markham to look at this thing in its proper light—to feel his old liking for the young man who had grown up from a boy in his service, slowly directed into the channels of suspicion and dislike, as he was led to regard him as a fortune-hunter, and, finally to forbid him the house, and in the first harsh words he had ever addressed his life's one idol, demanded her compliance with his stern decision.

All this had happened two months before this fair June night, when the story opens. Randolph Chester was two months older, and no nearer his goal—but, in justice, it must be added, no whit more discouraged as to his ultimate success.

"Grey Oaks never looked lovelier than this summer," he said, after a short pause. "Do you purpose filling the old house with your gay friends, Beatrice?" he asked, turning to his fair young hostess and cousin thrice removed.

"If I had my way, papa and I would reign here in unbroken solitude," she replied.

"That would scarcely be allowed last season's acknowledged belle," he retorted, courteously. "Besides, Grey Oaks' own reputation for hospitality could not be so misnamed."

Without replying, the girl arose impatiently from her seat. Stopping an instant beside her father's chair, she bent and laid her lips caressingly on his white hair.

"You will find me on the piazza, papa," she whispered, and passed out through one of the French windows, leaving the two men alone.

"I took your advice to-day, Randolph," said the older man. "I dismissed Talbot from my service. It hurt me to do it, too, for he has served me faithfully, so far as my business interests were concerned; but, after all, it was light punishment for his presumption. I offered him an amount over and above his due, which would have represented his next year's salary, but he refused it, and bore himself with a dignity which I could not but admire."

"He is a good actor, Cousin Donald; but I thought you had learned to see through his devices."

The old man sighed. He had been fond of the boy of whom he spoke, and that morning's interview had touched a tender chord and wakened sleeping memories.

Meanwhile, allured by the moonlight on the lawn, Beatrice was slowly sauntering under the shadow of the oaks, when some one stepped from behind the sheltering trunk of one of them, and spoke her name.

A slight scream rose to her lips, but quickly she repressed it, as she recognized in the intruder the man who in that instant filled her thoughts.

"Bertram!" she exclaimed; what imprudence! Why have you come here?"

"Why, my darling? The question would sound less strangely uttered by any other than yourself. What could have brought me, save the hope of seeing you?"

As he spoke, he threw his arm about her delicate waist, and drew her to his heart. One moment she leaned there, and then gently released herself.

"This must not be, Bertram," she said, firmly. "There is no wrong, no deception in our love for each other. We must not let it creep in. Remember papa's love and devotion to me. But for Randolph Chester's influence he would long since have acceded to my prayer, for your happiness and mine. As it is, we must be patient. It will take a long time to convince him that all my heart is yours; but, once convinced, our sky will be all blue again."

"Ah, Beatrice, you speak hopefully," answered the young man, sadly, his voice trembling with feeling. "It is possible you do not know that I was to-day dismissed from your father's service—dismissed, Beatrice, as though I had entered it but yesterday."

"Ah, this is shameful!" cried the girl, passionate indignation ringing in her tone. "What can papa been dreaming of?"

"But do not blame him, Beatrice. I noticed that he was strangely silent to-night. I am sure he already regrets an act of such bitter injustice."

"Let me go to him! Come with me now. We will confront him, and I will ask him if thus he makes my happiness!"

"No—no; it would only anger him. Besides, I cannot be a suppliant, even for your sake. No, Beatrice, I have determined on my course of action; it is for this I sought you here to-night. Otherwise, my pride, like yours, would have rebelled against a secret meeting. But I had to look once more into your eyes, my love. I came not to ask your welcome, Beatrice, but your farewell."

"Farewell!" echoed the girl, in a low whisper. "You are going to leave me, Bertram?"

"Not for long, I trust. But we are both young, Beatrice, and I must wipe from myself the stain of fortune-hunting. Oh, how the name burnt as it fell from your father's lips! A year ago, Beatrice, I fancied he smiled upon our attachment. Why did he throw us together if but to visit us with his afterwrath?"

"Have you forgotten the serpent in our Eden? We had not then admitted him. Cousin Randolph was abroad. He it is, not papa, that has done all this."

"But his motive, Beatrice? What can that be?"

A hot flush kindled the beautiful cheek.

"I hate to whisper it, Bertram. But he—he pretends to love me. Don't, dear!"—for the young man had made an involuntary gesture of anger and defiance. "In his heart I believe he hates me. But do you not see, Bertram? It is he to whom the term fortune-hunter belongs. Wait, Bertram; give me time, and I will win papa yet."

She leaned her head upon her lover's arm. He stooped and pressed his lips to her hair.

Absorbed in each other, neither saw the dark shadow creeping stealthily nearer to them, until he had gained the tree beneath whose spreading branches they stood.

Sheltered by its branches, their unsuspected listener could hear every word falling from their lips. He took good care that not one should escape him.

CHAPTER II.

For a little time the silence was unbroken. Then Beatrice raised her head.

"What do you mean to do, Bertram?" she asked, "and how can I help you?"

"By bidding me Godspeed, my darling, and by promising me to bravely wait my return. I am going out to the mines in Colorado. I am going to stake my little on the chances of striking fortune at the turning tide. I may succeed, I may fail, but I have faith to believe that I will succeed. At any rate, I cannot stay here. It would be years before I could prove to your father that no mercenary influence induced my hope of winning you. I have already made my arrangements. If I had a larger amount of money, I could at once secure a valuable interest, but I must wait for that."

"You need more money, Bertram? Oh, let me go to papa and ask him for it! He will not deny me."

"Impossible, my child! Besides, it would only bring the end a little nearer, and by my own exertions I shall attain the goal. Once I would have gone frankly to your father, as to the best friend any man might have. But that is past. But for leaving you, Beatrice, I should not regret the new life and the new hopes; but, oh, my darling, to leave you, knowing that another loves you!—one, too, who exerts so strange, so incomprehensible an influence over your father. I am tempted to throw all aside, and stay near you, to watch and protect you."

Behind the tree a dark face grew darker, and beneath a silken mustache met gleaming white teeth with grinding force.

"I, too, feel, Bertram, that I cannot let you go," whispered the girl. "Why should so cruel a thing as this separation be entailed upon us? Listen to me, Bertie! I will see papa to-night. I will tell him frankly that we have met, and then I will throw my arms about his neck, and tell him that he is breaking my heart. Do you know what he will do, Bertie? He will end by giving me my way, and making us both happy. I will tell him that I hate this man, whose tie of relationship to me I fairly loath. I will unmask him—I will show papa how cruel and treacherous he is. Why, Bertram, to bend circumstances to his will, I believe he would murder. He would pause at no obstacle that lay in his path. Don't be too proud, Bertie. You shall make this journey, if you still wish; but first papa shall give his consent to our marriage, on your return. I am willing to wait for that long years, if must be—until your fortune is made; but I must have the protection of our acknowledged love during your absence. I will meet you here to-morrow night, Bertie. You will not fail me?"

"No, darling; my love is stronger than my pride. I will be here."

A few moments more she lingered in his embrace, while the figure near them stole from its lurking place, and glided back to the house.

"Well, did you find her, Randolph?" called a voice as he came within view of the piazza.

The man did not answer, as he slowly drew near the speaker, while in his brain quick thoughts revolved as to how his reply should be couched.

When the distance between them had been traversed his mind was made up.

"Yes, Cousin Donald, I found her," he said, slowly.

"And you have quarreled again, Randolph? Or why did she not return with you?"

"I hastened back myself because I did not wish to pry upon a lovers' meeting" (speaking more firmly now, as if with sudden frankness.) "You think—I have sometimes suspected—that I have tempted you into injustice toward Bertram Talbot; yet, if you will stroll across your own lawn, you will find him tempting your daughter to another surreptitious meeting for another night, and pleading with her to use her influence with you, meanwhile, to acknowledge him her accepted lover. He needs money, he says, for some mining scheme, and, as your acknowledged son-in-law, can obtain all he covets. To Beatrice's generous heart this all seems natural. You and I can understand it. I hate to tell you this, but I should not be doing my duty did I leave it unsaid."

White with fierce rage, Donald Markham sprang from his seat.

"You tell me this man steals into my grounds like a thief, and, in secret meetings with my child endeavors thus to win her favor? Where are they?"

"Be calm, Cousin Donald! Beatrice is high-spirited. She must not suspect me of giving you this information. Ah! here she comes now! Let her believe you saw them yourself; only you will no longer think yourself unjust toward Bertram Talbot?"

"Unjust? No!" he cried, with trembling voice. "But Beatrice—Beatrice, whom I loved and trusted. She, too, has lent herself to this deceit—"

"She is young, and her love blinds her," answered the other, gently.

In her white robes, with fragrant roses at her waist, Beatrice crossed the lawn in the full moonlight, advancing toward them. For the first time her presence brought no softening lines in Donald Markham's face. He stood awaiting her. Before she could speak he drew her hand within his arm and led her into the library.

"What was Bertram Talbot doing in my grounds to-night?" he asked. "How dare you meet him secretly?"

Frankly, fearlessly, the girl met the sternness of his gaze; but at the latter question, the spirit he had bequeathed to her flashed into her face.

"Papa, you forgot yourself!" she replied. "Whoever it was need not have troubled themselves. I intended to have told you that I had seen Bertram, and to ask you to give your consent to our engagement—"

"Never!" he exclaimed, his passion blazing beyond bounds. "That man is a scoundrel and destitute of honor, or he would never have approached you thus, in the very teeth, too, of his dismissal from my employ. Listen, Beatrice. In all your life no wish has been denied you. You owe me the more obedience now. Never shall you see or speak to this man again, unless he gains your presence over my dead body. Nothing shall ever swerve me from this, my final decision; and if again Bertram Talbot forces his way into the grounds, I will shoot him down like the thief he is!"

"Papa!" cried the unhappy girl. "Will you not listen to me? I will obey you, if you wish to break my heart. But Bertram is going away, and I must see him once more. I must tell him what you have said. He knows that all my heart is his, as I know that all his heart is mine. He is coming here to-morrow night, papa, because I asked him to come. He only came to-night to bid me good-bye, because he is going away to work and make a fortune, to prove to you that he cares nothing for my money. Oh, papa, why are we rich, if it is to bring us only wretchedness?"

"You say this man dares to again propose a second meeting between you for to-morrow night? Beatrice, you have overstepped my patience beyond its limits. Go to your room. You will remain there until I and Bertram Talbot have met."

"Oh, papa!" I may not see him once—may not soften to him, ever so little, the bitterness of your most cruel decision? Papa, how can I obey you in this?"

"At least, Beatrice, I can force obedience. See to it that you do not drive me to take so desperate a step. Now, go to your room, and when we meet again, understand that this man's name is never to be mentioned between us!"

"Papa, I will obey you. I am helpless. I cannot rebel. But one day you will regret that you have entailed upon me this bitter anguish. I do not owe it to you, papa. It is Randolph Chester's doing. Do you think I do not recognize his handiwork? Oh, papa, why do you let this wicked, designing man glide like a snake between us? Would to God my eyes had never looked upon his face!"

"Hush! Not another word!" exclaimed Mr. Markham, more sternly than he had ever before spoken in the presence of his idolized child.

Beatrice gave him one glance of mute reproach, and then sadly, but without defiance, left the room.

Scarcely had the door closed behind her than her father was tempted to hasten after her and beg her forgiveness, as though he had been the culprit; for, after all, what was there in the world compared to Beatrice's happiness?

She had judged him rightly, but Chester who had watched the ending of the interview, now entered the library.

"I almost regret telling you, Cousin Donald," he said, reproachfully. "I did not wish Beatrice to be made wretched, but indignation at this fellow's presumption mastered me. The base advantage he took, too of a girl's weakness and your hitherto generous kindness."

His words did not fail of their mark. They, for the moment, banished Beatrice from her father's thoughts and fanned the flame of his wrath against the youth who once had been dear to him, and whom now he termed interloper and fortune-hunter.

"I will win you, yet, my lady," so soliloquized Randolph, when at last he had bade his cousin good-night, and sought the retirement of his own apartments. "I will win and wear you, though whether I must love or hate you I cannot tell."

Slowly the long hours of the succeeding day wore away. Beatrice sat, silent and impassive, in the exquisite room which had been to her the scene of so many happy hours, within whose walls her heart had first whispered to her its awakening to the dawn of love. To-day all save faith in her lover has fled. The night fell and the moon rose, the little clock chimed the hour when she and Bertram were to have met. Was her father already at the rendezvous. She rose and crossed to the window facing the lawn.

Two figures were at that instant crossing it, and approaching the house. She recognized them both. They were her father and her lover. Randolph Chester was nowhere to be seen.

A half-hour followed. All was silent. What was going on in the library below her?

A sudden impulse seized her to go down stairs, to see Bertram once again, and in her father's presence, promise to be true to him, though their separation was eternal. She was no coward, and beside Bertram she might, indeed, be brave. Swiftly she threw open the door and hastened down the steps, but on the threshold of the room she paused. She could hear within angry and excited voices.

"It's a lie, Mr. Markham!" she heard Bertram say. "I never made such a proposition to your daughter! Have I ever lied to you, that you should doubt me? Will you not rather doubt one who brings to you a tale so infamous? At least, you will let me see Beatrice again?"

"Never! You shall never look upon her face! Whatever money you need I will give you. I offered you money once before, but only across my dead body shall you reach my child!"

"Money and insult—you are generous with both, Mr. Markham. Perhaps one day you will regret that you were so But as for Beatrice—"

"Beatrice is here to speak for herself," answered a voice, as the door was flung open, and a vision, lovely to both men's eyes, stood confronting them.

White with anger, Donald Markham took one hasty step forward, but she checked him with an imperious gesture, to which, for a moment, surprise rendered him obedient.

"Listen, papa, for I will speak, and you and Bertram both shall hear what I have to say! Bertram shall know and understand that while you live, I, your child, must render you obedience; but he shall also know that my heart, my faith, my loyalty, are his. To him I have pledged my vows. You may force me to break them, but never shall I pledge them to another. I will be his wife, or go unmarried to my grave! Papa, for the love you have always shown me, for the earlier, deeper, love you gave mamma, will you not yield your consent to that on which my life's happiness depends?"

"Consent to what?" thundered her father, in his wrath. "To your marriage with an adventurer and a fortune-hunter? Have I not heard how already he schemes for money to aid him in his plans? Leave the room, Beatrice. Return to your own. So long as you are daughter of mine, you have looked your last on Bertram Talbot's face!"

The girl fixed her eyes one moment full upon the speaker, then bravely, resolutely, she approached her lover.

"Good-bye, Bertie!" she said, sadly. "God only knows how long our good-bye may be, but were it through time and eternity, my love can know no wavering."

Even as she spoke she lifted her lips that they might meet his own.

For a moment he held her close in his embrace; but, releasing her, he stepped between her and the door.

"I must be the one to leave, Beatrice," he said. "You will bear me witness that I have accepted silently, for your sake, the insults your father has offered me. Within one year he shall acknowledge them unjust, or I will voluntarily forfeit my claim upon your love. If gold must buy you, then I must have gold. For one year, then, farewell!"

The door closed, and the father and daughter were alone.

She turned to leave the room, when the silence struck her strangely.

She looked toward her father. There was an ashen pallor on his face, and his lips were trembling.

Forgetful of all but the devotion she had ever lavished upon him, she sprang toward him.

"Papa!" she cried, "you are ill!"

"Leave me!" he gasped, as if breath came with an effort. "Leave me—ungrateful girl!"

"Oh, papa! let me stay! Forgive me!"

A little color crept back to his cheek, his voice sounded stronger.

"No, Beatrice," he said; "I am better now. Go to your room, child. In the morning we will both be calmer, and then—then I have something to tell you which the past five minutes have taught me must not be delayed in the telling. We—we never quarreled before, darling, and you will not refuse me obedience now. In the morning we will see what can be done."

CHAPTER III.

It was long ere Beatrice sank into a troubled sleep, and scarcely, it seemed to her, had her weary lids closed than again she widely opened them in dread consciousness of something wrong. Then, one by one, the events of the evening shaped themselves before her. Were they not sufficient to account for this terrible weight upon her breast, this deadly sinking at her heart?

Deep silence rested on the household. Within, without, there was no sound. Even the ordinary voices of the night seemed hushed.

She could almost fancy herself the only living thing in that awful solitude of space. Her limbs trembled. She felt her flesh grow cold. It was nervous folly, of course. She remembered once, as a tiny child, how she had wakened from a nightmare with something of the same sensation of fright, and called from her little crib for her father to comfort her. How tenderly he had answered her cry—how he had risen, and coming to her, held her in his arms and soothed her to sleep upon his breast!

She was not a child still to be soothed to slumber on his heart, but a great longing seized her to feel once more about her the dear, protecting arms.

The impulse was too strong to be resisted. She sprang up, and, throwing on a warm wrapper and thrusting her feet into slippers, she hastened to her father's door.

Once, twice, she knocked for admission. No answer came back. She tried, and found it yielded to her touch; but a glance within the moonlit room showed her its emptiness. Her father must still be below. It was not so late, then, as she had fancied.

But, half-way down the stairs the silence was broken.

The library door was violently flung open, and a man, white and trembling with excitement, rushed forth.

It was Bertram Talbot!

He cast no glances toward the stairs or the white apparition standing there, but rapidly crossed the hall, opened the outer door and went out into the night.

What new and terrible scene had been enacted? Shivering as if winter were upon her, she hastened down and entered the library.

Not until she had crossed its threshhold and caught sight of her father, sitting in an easy chair before his open desk, did she realize just what she had feared.

"Papa!" she cried—"dear, darling papa!"

But she seemed speaking to deaf ears. He neither spoke nor moved.

In an instant she was beside him.

"Merciful heaven! What terrible thing is this?"

The ashen pallor, which once before she had noted on his face, had deepened. He was gasping, painfully, for breath.

His eyes, with all anger fled from their depths, turned toward her, with the old, worshipful fondness.

"Papa!" she screamed—"speak to me! Oh, what has happened? Help! Will no one come?" and she sprang up to pull the bell.

Then, by effort almost superhuman, gasping words answered her piteous appeal:

"I—I—have—been—robbed! Bertram!—proof—I—consent—"

"Robbed, papa! Who has robbed you?"

But ere he could reply the outer door was thrown open, and Randolph Chester, fully dressed, preceded two men, the gardener and the coachman, while between them, as if in their custody, stood a third.

Randolph Chester cast toward Mr. Markham one penetrating look, and saw that his moments were numbered.

"We have caught the thief, sir," he began, with a significant glance toward Talbot.

But as the insult escaped his lips, the latter made a spring toward him. The two men caught his arms and held him back.

"It is only necessary for you to identify him," continued Chester, coolly.

Mr. Markham's power of speech had nearly gone. He pointed toward the three, but his glance and finger were directed toward the coachman, who grew ghastly white.

"Bertram!" he gasped—"Bertram—proof! I consent! Beatrice! the will—the papers—you will find—the secret—".

He could say no more. His head fell back. An expression of acute pain swept over his face, succeeded by perfect peace.

Donald Markham, master of Grey Oaks, was dead.

Randolph Chester bent over the dead man a moment, while a swift expression of triumph passed over his face; then he went toward Beatrice and tenderly took her hand.

"Come away, my child," he said, gently. "Your father is dead!"

"Dead!" she moaned. "No, no! Oh, God! how could he die, when so little time ago we were talking of to-morrow? Papa, papa! speak to me!"

"It was heart disease, Beatrice. He had known for four yars that any excitement would bring on death. He had kept it a secret from you, fearing to cause you unhappiness."

"And this was what he meant to tell me?" sobbed the girl. "And it was I who killed him—I, who loved him better than my life!"

"No, Beatrice; there stands his murderer! Look at him!" and he motioned toward Bertram, whose white lips met in one straight line, but who made no further effort to escape from the detaining grasp of his two guardians.

"Bertie!" cried the unhappy girl, "Bertie, why do you not speak to me? What is he saying? Oh, my brain is reeling! I am going mad!"

"Go to your room, dear child!" pleaded Chester. "All this is more than you can bear. To-morrow you shall know all."

"To-morrow! No!" she answered, firmly. "To-morrow is already to-day, and I will hear now—now, all that you have to say! But what is this you say of Bertie? I cannot understand—"

"Yet to-night you heard him boast that gold should buy you. How could he gain that gold? He stole back into the house he had left; entered the library by an open window, while your father had gone for a moment to his room, leaving open his safe, at which he had been examining some papers. A pile of bonds and notes were lying there. These he seized, and was just about making his escape, when your father entered. I was standing outside the window, an unseen witness to all that followed. I had been restless, could not sleep, and the beauty of the night had tempted me to enjoy it more perfectly outside. Your father's excitement had passed away, and he asked him, quite calmly, why he had returned. He began to speak, when your father's eye fell on the safe. Instantly he knew that he had been robbed, and that the thief stood before him. Old man as he was, he sprang toward him, but with a swift movement Talbot, eluding his grasp, turned to escape by the window but, seeing me, fled through the door. I lost no time in pursuit. I could not dream that Cousin Donald was so ill. Tyrrel I met in the grounds. He was just returning to his rooms from the village. Gray, I knew, was sitting up with his sick wife. One moment sufficed to call them both. We had little difficulty in overtaking and capturing the cowardly criminal. Beatrice, it cuts me to the soul to tell me this, as you stand by your dead father's side, yet a moment ago you heard from his lips a confirmation of my story. You saw him identify the thief."

"Thief, do you say?" she questioned, interrupting for the first time, while her glance one instant fell on Bertram Talbot's face, and met the answering glance from the clear brown eyes which met hers so fearlessly, and mutely seemed to ask, "Beatrice, do you believe this lie?"

"Whoever calls Bertram Talbot thief—lies!" she said. "Bertram, why do you not speak?"

"Words are useless, Beatrice," he answered. "Let this villain work his worst—my explanation and my presence here to-night is not for his ears!"

"Nor your explanation of how these came into your possession?" questioned Chester, scornfully; and he drew from his pocket a package of bonds and notes. "Tyrrel, explain how and where you found them?"

"Mr. Talbot threw 'em away, sir, as we came up to him; and I, thinking they might be of some value, picked 'em up."

"You see, Beatrice, these are the stolen bonds. Do you wish more proof?" asked Chester.

"More proof? Yes!" she cried. "I wish proof that you are the thief, and these men are false witnesses! Oh, papa, speak! Open your dear lips! I need you—more than ever in my life I need you! Papa, papa, come back to me!"

An expression of hate and bitter determination swiftly passed over Randolph Chester's face. Then he forced a smile of forgiving pity to take its place; but the evil light lurked in his eyes, and would not be hidden.

"Beatrice," he said, "you will regret these words when you are calmer."

But even while he spoke her lovely face blanched to the lily's whiteness, and, stretching out her arms toward her lover, she fell senseless at her dead father's feet.

Chester made a motion to bend over and lift her up, but Bertram Talbot sprang toward her.

In vain the men sought longer to hold him back. He flung them both from him.

With white face and set teeth he and Randolph Chester stood face to face, while between them lay the senseless form of Beatrice.

"Touch her at your peril!" whispered Talbot, in a low, distinct tone. "Lay your finger on her, and by the God above I will make good the name you called me, for I will kill you!"

"Gray—Tyrrel!" screamed Chester, springing back, "do your duty! Arrest this man!"

And, springing toward the bell, he pulled it violently.

CHAPTER IV.

But for once Randolph Chester's command was unheeded, his behest unobeyed. No one interfered as Talbot lifted in his arms the lovely, senseless form, and bore her tenderly to the couch, upon which he laid her, chafing her cold hands and moistening with water her pale lips.

Tyrrel, meantime, had slipped from the room and roused the sleeping household.

One by one its startled members came, awe-struck, into the presence of death. Thus reinforced, Chester recovered himself.

He beckoned Tyrrel to him, and whispered a few words in his ear. The man listened with an expression of wonderment and fear, then disappeared, and soon on the silent night was heard adown the drive the swift gallop of a horse's hoofs.

A grim smile wreathed his lips as he caught the sound. He could afford to act now, and, pointing to Talbot as he bent over Beatrice, he made a silent command that they should seize and overpower him.

Absorbed in his care of her, he had forgotten their presence, until both arms were caught from behind, and he found himself in the sturdy grasp of three strong men. One of them tore from the window its fastening, and bound it about his wrists.

He stood there, fettered and helpless, and Beatrice lay, unconscious of his degradation. One desperate effort he made to free himself. Then he saw its uselessness and forced himself to be calm; but the countenance of the dead bore no more ghastly pallor than his own, when Randolph Chester approached the couch and, lifting the senseless burden he had deposited there, bore it from his sight and from the room.

Nor did he return for full an hour, and then Tyrrel's errand was explained, for with him were two officers of the law.

He pointed to Talbot.

"There is your man," he said, and though he strove to give his voice the accent of calm and sorrow, it held the ring of his triumph and rejoicing. "We can prove him a thief," he continued. "His own soul brands him assassin, since the excitement of this night's work has ended my cousin's life."

The officers approached.

Talbot made no resistance as each laid a hand upon his shoulder. It seemed to him as though he were living some terrible nightmare; but, as he passed Chester in their custody, he fixed his burning eyes full upon his face.

"Coward and perjurer!" he said, in low, trenchant tones. "One day we shall have a heavy debt to settle, you and I—nor may you hope to escape its payment."

Then, in silence, he permitted them to lead him from the room and the house.

It was long ere Beatrice waked from her swoon; and when, at last, the beautiful eyes slowly unclosed, and a long, fluttering sigh heralded her return to life and consciousness, it formed itself into Bertram's name.

But only the physician, whom Tyrrell had summoned together with the officers of the law, bent over her in response.

"Calm yourself, my child, and try to sleep."

His voice but roused her further. She raised her head from her pillow.

"Send Bertram to me!" she said, imperatively.

The doctor, misunderstanding her command, and knowing that any opposition in her present state would be hurtful, beckoned her maid, who stood weeping by the window, to approach, and whispered a few words in her ear.

The girl hesitated an instant, then hastened from the room.

"I have sent for him, dear child," said the physician, soothingly. "But when he comes you must not talk."

"Papa?" she murmured, as if still trying to clear her brain of some lingering doubts. "He was ill—he is better?"

"He is out of pain, my child."

The answer seemed to satisfy her. She turned her head toward the door, and fixed her great, dark eyes upon it.

At last it was opened, but it was Randolph Chester who entered.

His face was very pale and his mouth twitched nervously; but he struggled hard to appear at ease.

Beatrice shrank away at sight of him, an awful scorn playing in her eyes.

Sudden strength seemed to come to her, as though born of hate. Memory asserted itself. The scene in the library returned to her.

She remembered that her father was dead; she remembered that he had been robbed.

There was a faint memory, too, that in some way Bertram Talbot had been connected with the robbery.

"I sent for Bertram, not you!" she said, in tones which evidenced the effort it cost her even to address him. "Where is he? Why does he not come?"

"Bertram Talbot is in jail," he answered, bitterly. "Do you still wish to see the thief, the man at whose door lies your father's death?"

"In jail?" she repeated, in a low whisper, striving by her repetition of the words to better realize their import.

To her excited fancy jail meant stone walls and stone floors, with a wretched pallet to lie upon and bread and water for food; and to such a place her lover had been taken and accused of such a crime.

"Coward!" she exclaimed, raising herself from her pillow and fixing her burning eyes upon his face. "No need to ask who has wreaked this wrong. Is it thus that you would slake your hate? But he must be freed at once. Papa, come to me! Help me! Oh, my God, you have taken him from me, too! I am indeed, alone!"

And, with a long, shivering sigh, she again relapsed into unconsciousness.

A moment, while the physician strove to restore her, Chester stood motionless. Her scorn, her anger, had kindled to fiercer heat the passions that swayed him.

"You shall yet come a suppliant to my feet, fair cousin," he whispered, though only his soul caught the whisper and import. "You shall yet wash out with your bitterest tears the words that you have let drop to-day. You shall yet acknowledge me, in all humiliation, your lord, your master and your husband! Ah, fate is kind to me! It has placed you in my power!"

CHAPTER V.

Three days later, and Donald Markham was laid to his last rest, with all due pomp and honor, in the family vault; opened for the first time since it closed on the body of his young wife, twenty long years before.

But Beatrice still lay unconscious of all that was taking place about her. The terrible strain upon her brain and heart had been greater than her strength, and brain fever had been its consequence.

Day and night her cry was, alternately, for "Papa and Bertram."

Once or twice her cousin had ventured into the sick room; but, however intense her delirium, his presence always irritated and excited her.

He had recovered, however, his usual calm. He listened, even to her bitter denunciation of him in her ravings, with a smile of irony.

In the household he asserted the place of the dead master.

On the second day after the tragedy, when Mr. Markham's lawyer came down from the city, he assisted him in his search among the dead man's papers for his will.

"There were two I drew up myself," said the lawyer—"one when Beatrice was a baby, and one not more than three months ago. In both she was left the undisputed heiress of all his property, except for minor legacies and bequests, since in law, in any case, she inherits as next of kin."

To all of which Mr. Chester smiled assentingly.

But the search for either will was vain.

"You say there were two wills made?" asked Randolph Chester, on the day following the funeral, when once more he and the lawyer met in his uncle's library. "Perhaps one is among Mr. Markham's papers at your office, and you have overlooked it?"

He asked the question with an indrawing of his breath, but drew a sigh of relief at the lawyer's answer.

"I drew the will here and left it in Mr. Markham's own care. By the way, Mr. Chester, you are somewhat the loser, for it is no breach of professional secrecy to tell you that in it you were named to the extent of $50,000. He owed you that, your cousin said, as some recompense for having married again, and so cheated you out of your otherwise natural rights as his heir."

"By the way, Mr. Arnold," interrupted the listener, somewhat abruptly, "speaking of professional secrecy, there is one matter on which I wish to speak to you under its seal. Did my cousin ever enter into any particulars with you concerning his marriage?"

"Never; excepting to refer to it as a short dream of untainted bliss. Once, I remember, he laughed and declared the only act of impulsive folly he had permitted himself had turned out the wisest action of his life. I believed he referred to his marriage then, but I asked no questions."

"Yet your conclusions were right. My cousin, Mr. Arnold, is my affianced wife; therefore you can comprehend the sacredness of the secret I am about to confide to you. Of course, her marriage to me will do away with any further necessity for its revealing. My cousin's marriage was, indeed, an act of folly. In fact, it was no marriage at at all!"

The lawyer's professional calm, for the first time in twenty-five years, deserted him as these words fell upon his ears.

He sprang excitedly from his chair.

"What are you saying, Mr. Chester?" he asked, excitedly, indignantly.

"I am asserting a truth, Mr. Arnold, or, rather, I am betraying a confidence, for I am but repeating to you a story I gleaned from my cousin's lips.

"Years ago, while traveling in Italy, he wandered one night into the opera house at Florence. A young and beautiful woman was to make her debut as prima donna, and the house was crowded from pit to dome.

"She made her entree in the middle of the first act, and, as she glided upon the stage, my cousin told me he held his breath. It seemed to him an angel stood there.

"The plaudits and welcome of the people restored him to earth, and brought him down from the realms of heaven, where his fancy had led him.

"Then the house grew silent.

"The low strains of the orchestra announced the prelude to the song. The debautante stood facing the people. She opened her lips, but no sound came forth.

"She had been struck with stage fright, and her voice had deserted her.

"It was an awful moment, and the Italians, always excitable, forgot her youth and beauty, and let hisses take the place of cheers.

"It was more than she could bear. She grew deathly pale, and beat a hasty retreat from the stage.

"Some one was found to take her place, and after necessary delay the opera went on, but to my cousin its charm had fled.

"Of course, the poor girl's career was ended. She had already received her discharge from the manager.

"When, next morning, my cousin discovered where she lived, and went in person to her lodgings to offer her sympathy and support, he found her bathed in tears, but more beautiful than smiling in the glare of the footlights.

The misery children make for their parents is well known; the misery parents make for their children not so well.

WITH THE LAWMAKERS

Doings In the State Legislature.

St. Paul, March 19.—The house yesterday unanimously recommended for passage Mr. Peterson's bill providing for a revision of the constitution. The action was taken on general orders without opposition. The senate recently killed an identical measure. The Rich bill increasing the pay of the railroad commissioners $600 a year was killed.

The budget of new bills introduced included one by Mr. Lane of Minneapolis to tax grain elevators as the personal property of the elevator men. The bill is one which will probably be bitterly fought by a high-salaried lobby on the part of the elevator men. The greater part of the time was spent on the calendar. The bills passed included the Armstrong bill requiring hotels and lodging houses to have fire escapes, and the Fust bill for the regulation of barber schools. This had a close call, only mustering 63 votes after a vigorous campaign.

A bill was introduced to require all prison-made goods to be so marked.

The anti-wineroom bill was passed. The "tax-ferret" bill was reported for indefinite postponement and a long, hard fight is predicted on the measure.

In the Senate.

Thirty-two members of the senate answered roll call at a brief session last night. The calendar was not taken up and general orders received only passing attention. On account of the bare quorum there was no attempt to transact any business of importance.

St. Paul, March 20.—After a five-hour fight on general orders in the senate yesterday the board of control bill was amended to include the state educational institutions and the soldiers' home. The senate adjourned without final action and more amendments will be tacked on when the special order is continued this morning.

The senate killed Dr. Chilton's bill to prevent the marriage of imbeciles under forty-five years of age and to require a physician's examination of applicants for marriage licenses.

The drainage bill, carrying an appropriation of $50,000, was unanimously passed.

The Greer bill, which Senator Roverud endeavored to have entitled "A bill for the temporary relief of Russell Sage," was passed. This bill will cause the original village of Reed's to pay $10,000 of village bonds, which debt it tried to evade.

The Nichols house bill imposing a 5 per cent gross earnings tax on express companies was substituted for the identical measure introduced in the senate yesterday and placed on general orders.

In the House.

A bill intended to limit evasion of the prohibitory liquor laws in dry counties was introduced in the house by Representative Hillmond. The bill provides that practicing physicians who prescribe distilled, malt or vinous liquors in quantities in excess of two apothecary ounces to any one person in any one day shall be guilty of misdemeanor.

Bills were passed carrying appropriations aggregating $1,290.70, the amount of the expense accounts reported by the principals to the Blair-Mahood contest.

Representative J. A. Peterson's bill for a constitutional convention was passed without opposition.

Mr. Mallory of St. Louis introduced a bill legalizing all township bonds issued for road and bridge improvements.

The Peterson "mental anguish" telegraph bill was killed by practically a unanimous vote.

Mr. Dobbin of Hennepin introduced a bill authorizing the governor to set aside a suitably furnished room in the new capitol to be used as a permanent headquarters for the Minnesota department, G. A. R.

St. Paul, March 21.—Representative Jacobson sprung a decided sensation in the house yesterday by making the statement that he had in his possession evidence of bribery and corruption in connection with the recommendation of the committee to refer his bill providing for a 4 per cent gross earnings tax to the new tax commission. Representative Washburn, upon the defeat of Mr. Jacobson's motion to have the bill placed on general orders, said he had evidences of corruption which he desired to place before the house. Mr. Jacobson, in the course of his remarks in support of his bill, made the sensational statement that "one of the most corrupt legislatures ever assembled in St. Paul has infested the capitol for three weeks." Exciting scenes followed the charges of Mr. Jacobson and Mr. Washburn and demands for the appointment of an investigating committee were loud and persistent. A resolution directing the speaker to appoint a committee of five members to investigate the alleged charges was carried unanimously. The committee will be named to-day.

The debate on Mr. Jacobson's measure consumed the entire day. The report favorable to the bill was defeated by a vote of 65 to 49.

Consideration of the senate resolution providing for adjournment April 5 was postponed until Saturday.

In the Senate.

The Burns telephone bill was killed by the senate yesterday, and a substitute, granting the same rights without endangering any provision of either the St. Paul or Duluth charters, was introduced in its stead and passed under suspension of the rules.

The Chilton meat inspection bill was withdrawn yesterday and a bill from the senate committee on public health substituted. The provisions of the former for the payment of fees for inspection are eliminated, and an appropriation of $65,000 is made to carry inspection into effect during the coming two years.

The board of control bill was put over until 2:30 to-day and the amendment adopted Tuesday was referred to a committee to be redrafted.

Among several bills passed was the Lord divorce bill, one of the conditions of which is that all divorce cases must be heard in open court.

In the House.

St. Paul, March 22.—Speaker Dowling yesterday named Representatives Mallory, Whitford, Johnson, Wells and Lee as a committee to investigate the charges made by Messrs. Jacobson and Washburn that bribery and corruption had been used in connection with the attempt to refer the gross earnings tax bill to the tax commission. The committee is expected to immediately begin the consideration of the evidence in the possession of Messrs. Jacobson and Washburn and sift the ugly charges to the bottom.

The opponents of the Jacobson bill are at a white heat and vociferously assert that Messrs. Jacobson and Washburn must prove their charges or take the consequences. They claim that the bribery charges were made to delay action on the bill. The charges were expected to furnish fuel for inflaming public sentiment that pressure might be brought to drive sufficient number of the opponents of immediate passage of the bill into the Jacobson camp to insure against its reference to the tax commission.

Representative Laybourn of St. Louis, who led the fight to secure the reference of the gross earnings tax bill to the tax commission, yesterday submitted an amendment to the report of the majority of the tax committee, providing that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the tax commission with the instruction that that body prepare a bill or bills covering the subject of railroad taxation to be submitted to the legislature with the commission's report on the revision of the tax laws. The amendment, after a vigorous debate in which the charges of corruption were again brought to the front by the champions of the bill was adopted by a vote of 60 to 51. The bill lies on the table, still in the possession of the house, and may be taken up and passed or killed at any time Mr. Jacobson can marshal a majority of the strength present.

The house passed the anti-cigarette bill.

In the Senate.

The Jones and Daly anti-trust bills were passed by the senate after a lengthy debate, the opposition being led by Senator Wilson of Minneapolis. One of these bills is to forbid all pools, trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade, and the other puts the measure in force for all existing as well as future trusts, and regulates court jurisdiction.

The board of control bill was put over until to-day.

Senator Ives introduced a bill shortening the legislative sessions to eighty consecutive days.

Resolutions paying a sympathetic tribute to the life and work of the late Chaplain Lewis were adopted. Rev. Chainnard of St. Peter was elected to fill the vacant chaplaincy.

The Hickey bill reducing the rate of interest on state land contracts from 5 to 4 per cent was passed.

JAMAICAN APPEAL.

Commissioners to Ask Great Britain for Restoration of Constitutional Rights.

Kingston, Jam., March 23. — The steamer Port Royal, belonging to Elder, Dempster & Co., and the second vessel to sail from Jamaica direct for England, has left here with a full cargo of fruit for Bristol. Among her numerous passengers were the two elected members of the legislature who are empowered to make an appeal to Great Britain for the restoration of constitutional rights by Joseph Chamberlain, secretary of state for the colonies. The projected tax on banana land is receiving considerable attention. The bulk of this tax will fall upon the United Fruit company. It is feared that they will protest against being called upon to support the opposition company trading with England. Owing to the abrogation of the constitution the measure will probably pass, despite the popular opposition.

CANADIAN GUFF.

Member of Parliament Talks Loud and Foolishly.

Ottawa, Ont., March 23.—During the course of a speech on the budget in the house of commons W. F. McLean, Conservative from East Ontario, made a sharp attack on the United States. He followed Mr. Marcellus, who, during his speech made the remark that what Canada most desired was reciprocity with the United States. Mr. McLean, on the other hand, abused the United States, which he said was composed of men of sharp practice, who always tried to get the better of their opponents. He spoke of them as bulldozers, and yet no country was so vulnerable. England, he added, could bring the United States to time in five minutes. His policy was to raise the tariff against the United States as high as it was against Canada. Other speakers who followed took exception to Mr. McLean's remarks against the United States.

MESSAGE IN A BOTTLE.

It Tells of the Wreck of a Schooner and the Capture by Indians of Two of the Crew.

Galveston, Tex., March 23.—A message found in a bottle picked up on the beach yesterday by a little girl says that the schooner Rover of New York was wrecked at Cape Horn and that the two writers of the message, Joseph and James Swift, are captives of the Terra del Fuegan Indians. It is believed here that the schooner Rover of Baltimore is missing or lost, for an old list gives such an ocean-going vessel, and the name of the same vessel does not appear in the 1900 book. The message from the bottle bears date of Aug. 9, 1899, and is written on a playing card.

MILITARY RULE ENDING.

Transfer to Civil Administration in the Philippines to Occur June 30.

Washington, March 23. — According to calculations at the war department, the transfer from the military to the civil government in the Philippines will occur about June 30.

Crookston will have an exciting election this spring and the result will be watched with interest throughout the valley. N. Campbell, the present mayor, is a candidate for re-election, and the Republicans have nominated M. R. Brown for this important office.

The editor of the Rural Northwest, of Portland, Ore., says that he can remember when it was the universal belief in Minnesota that the northern half of that state, excepting a narrow strip along the western boundary, would never sustain enough population to be worth figuring on. During the past ten years the population of what was then supposed to be barren wastes, from an agricultural standpoint, has grown more rapidly than any other agricultural district in the United States.

GOT OFF EASY

And Yet It Cost a Good Round Sum.

The trial of the Cook brothers and George Wilcox for the illegal killing of game, resulted in a very mild verdict for the boys, and yet it has cost them a good round sum when it is considered that over $1,200 worth of game was confiscated. Fred and Henry Cook were allowed to plead guilty to having each killed one deer, and were fined $25 and costs, making the total amount $150. The case against Wilcox was dismissed. F. H. Krafka went over to Bemidji to attend the trial and it was due to his influence that the boys got off so easy.

BERG'S BILL

Will Make It Easy to Form New Counties.

Hon. Albert Berg, of Warroad, has introduced a bill in the state legislature to amend the law in regard to changing the boundary line and the formation of new counties. The object is to let that territory tributary to Warroad in both Roseau and Beltrami counties be formed into a new county. If a bill of this character would become a law it would probably make it easy for the forming of the new county of which Thief River Falls is to be the county seat.

Ground Feed.

I believe that any kind of grain is much better for feed when ground than when given whole, says a correspondent of The American Agriculturist. It is more completely digested, and there is less liability of inflammation of the digestive tract. As a rule we feed oats whole to horses, but give ground feed to other farm animals. For dairy cows four quarts per day of ground oats will not be too much if the animal is matured. For younger cattle we feed smaller amounts in proportion to age. We grind barley and oats together and occasionally mix in a little wheat. Corn and cob meal we also find satisfactory. For fattening hogs we grind barley, meal and wheat together in equal parts. This is an excellent feed for hogs intended for the butcher.

Bulls in the Tread Power.

When grinding feed for our herd, says an Ohio farmer, we use a tread power and two thoroughbred bulls. Not only is this economical, but the bulls are kept in better condition, being easy to manage, and are better breeders. All our grain is ground, whether it is fed to young or matured cattle. We are satisfied that it is much more thoroughly digested and consequently much more valuable. During winter we feed ensilage twice a day and clover, hay or millet once. The grain feed is bran, old process oilmeal and gluten feed.
